The CHAIRMAN. That is precisely what the Chair has held, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] has been informed that he must state his point of order, if he insists upon

Mr. OLMSTED. I understood a little while ago when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] objected, that the Chair held that the Member reserving the point of order was entitled to five minutes of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was careful to state that his ruling was in conformity with the conventional procedure in Committee of the Whole. Being temporarily in the chair, the present occupant would not depart from this practice, even if so disposed, which he is not.

Mr. OLMSTED. The Chair did so state. I find in Hinds'

Precedents, Volume V, section 6869, the following:

A point of order may not be reserved by a Member if another Member insists on an immediate decision.

That was decided by Mr. DALZELL, who was in the chair at the time. Mr. Underwood reserved a point of order and Mr. Hepburn of Iowa objected, and after discussion the Chair [Mr. DALZELL] said:

The Chair thinks the gentleman can not reserve the point of order in the face of an objection on the part of any member of the committee. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] desires to insist on his point of order and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Hepburn, insists that it shall not be reserved, it must be disposed of now.

The CHAIRMAN. The ruling cited is in conformity with parliamentary law, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my demand for the regular order, as I have no desire to cut off debate.

The CHAIRMAN. In conformity with the authority quoted, the Chair rules now, as it has ruled heretofore, that the reservation of a point of order is not a matter of right under the rules, but of general acquiescence. All proceedings under such a reservation are a form of unanimous consent. Objection having been made, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] is requested to state his point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 4 of the bill there is a provision appropriating $1,420,000 for day and industrial schools.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is addressing himself to a paragraph that has been passed, and I make the further objection that the five minutes indicated by the Chair have elapsed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is merely referring to a paragraph that has been read. He has been requested to state his point of order, and as the Chair understands, is now proceeding to do so.

Mr. FOWLER. That is the case, Mr. Chairman.

The paragraph under consideration provides for an appropriation of $300,000 for the purpose of conducting experiments on Indian school farms or agency farms. It would appear, Mr. Chairman from a reading of these two sections that there is a ling the high cost of living.

double appropriation. - Certainly the appropriation of $1,420,000. a portion of which is to be applied to industrial schools for the purpose of teaching the Indians farming, is for the same object as is provided for in the paragraph under discussion.

Also, Mr. Chairman, the proviso concluding that paragraph

That the amounts paid to matrons, farmers, and stockmen herein provided for shall not be included within the limitation on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of June 7, 1897.

Mr. Chairman it would seem also that there was an attempt at a double appropriation in that portion of this paragraph. Under the explanation given by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris], I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. At the time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] reserved a point of order—as a matter of fact, before he reserved a point of order, I think-I was recognized. At any rate, I offered an amendment to this paragraph. Am I not entitled to an opportunity to discuss this paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming has not been recognized, but of course the present occupant of the chair intends to recognize him in due course. The Chair will state that the amendment referred to must have been offered while the present occupant of the chair was temporarily out of the Chamber.

Mr. MONDELL. It was certainly offered while the Chairman was in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. As the gentleman from Wyoming will recall, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rubey] occupied the chair for some moments, and doubtless the amendment to which the gentleman refers was offered during that time.

Mr. MONDELL. Doubtless that is so.
Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the Chair that the gentleman from Wyoming was in fact recognized, and had sent up an amendment, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] reserved a point of order, and then the gentleman from Wyoming was taken off the floor-

Mr. MANN. And before the amendment was offered.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair has stated, all of this occurred during the present Chairman's temporary absence from the Chamber.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the item I have referred to in the bill is for an appropriation to teach farming rather than to teach parliamentary law; else I should be tempted to support the substitute. [Laughter.] It provides that $300,000 shall be appropriated for the purpose of teaching agriculture. And, Mr. Chairman, in view of the hue and cry heard all over this country with regard to the high cost of living, I think the item is deserving and ought to be appropriated.

It seems to me that if there is a science that ought to be taught in this Republic to-day it is the science of agriculture. Those who inhabit the cities of our country and who complain of the high price of potatoes ought to know that land can be had in the West at from $5 to $10 an acre that will produce 300 bushels of potatoes to the acre. Those who look to the new administration for a decrease in the price of beef ought to know that the best way to decrease the price of beef is to go into the farming business and raise beef cattle. Those in the great crowded cities who are making a propaganda for a decrease in the price of eggs ought to know that the only sure way to bring about a reduction in the price of that commodity is to understand the poultry business.

So, Mr. Chairman, if there is one piece of information that the people of this country ought to have in this day of false Republicanism and blind bull mooseism, it is that the cost of living can be reduced by an increase of production rather than by a ferment of political agitation. Why, sir, the old earth upon which we live stands ready to respond to the touch of the husbandman. Down in the South and out in the West lie with beckoning hospitality the untilled acres of the earth bidding the inhabitants of the teeming cities to come and raise hay and horses and eggs and beefsteak. Mr. Chairman, you will get more good results by teaching the people to raise the necessities of life than by this maudlin agitation about the high cost of living. Sir, in the community in which I live 500 gallons of sirup can be produced upon a single acre of land that can be bought for $10 or $15. Surely to teach the poor Indian that he can get out and go to work and reduce the high cost of living will do him more good than a dissertation upon the tariff or upon international arbitration for the purpose of determin-

I am sincerely glad, Mr. Chairman, that this item is in the bill, and I hope some poor Indian will read and get the benefit of it, and that instead of joining societies to break the egg market he will get him some young pullets and feed them hot mash in the morning and take care of them and harvest his eggs and learn that that is the best way to reduce the price of eggs. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it the desire of the gentleman from Texas to cut off all amendment to the paragraph and all de-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand that the gentleman from Wyoming has offered his amendment, and I am willing—Mr. MONDELL. The Chair informed "the gentleman from Wyoming" that he had not offered his amendment, and he has certainly had no opportunity to discuss it, and there has been

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say that the gentleman from Wyoming is in error. The Chair did not state that the gentleman from Wyoming had not offered his amendment, but that the amendment was not offered while the present occupant of the chair was in the House. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rubey] stated that during his occupancy of the chair the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming was sent to the desk.

Mr. MONDELL. I have had no opportunity to discuss it. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will move that the debate be limited to 10 minutes instead of 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be concluded at the expiration of 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to have his amendment reported?

Mr. MONDELL. I do. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 5, line 15, after the word "Indians," by inserting "in the growing and care of agricultural crops and."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment ought to be adopted, and I hope the committee will not object

Mr. FERRIS. It is subject to a point of order. Mr. MONDELL. I had intended to offer an amendment increasing the appropriation $100,000. I should offer that amendment now if I thought there was any hope of its being adopted, but in the present temper of the Committee of the Whole I fear there is no hope of that. But, Mr. Chairman, I will say to my friend from Illinois that this is the only appropriation carried in the Indian appropriation bill providing for the employment of farmers and matrons and other employees to instruct the Indians. The provision is unfortunate in that while the services of farmers, stockmen, and matrons are employed in instructing the Indians, there is not anything in the paragraph that authorizes any expenditure except in connection with the agency farms.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. I offer this amendment in order to make it clear that these people are to be employed—as a matter of fact they are employed—in the instruction of Indians generally. The most important part of their work is the instruction of Indians in agricultural pursuits.

It is much more important to have these people go about among the Indians and instruct them on their own farms a portion of the time than it is to have them spend all the time in experiments on the agency farms. They are so employed and yet a strict construction of this paragraph would not allow such employment. I simply want to amend the paragraph so that these people can be employed as the House contemplates that they shall be, and, as a matter of fact, they are being

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not this language cover it, in lines 21 to 24, page 5:

For the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; and to superintend farming and stock raising among the Indians.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think so, in view of the fact that the first part of the paragraph states how the money shall be

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But this part that I have read bys, "in addition to the agency and school farmers now emsays, ployed."

Mr. MONDELL. That says that farmers, in addition to farmers employed in other parts of the bill, paid for out of the tribal funds. These are in addition to that, and I do not think that the language would necessarily justify the Commissioner of Indian Affairs employing these people, and why not make it plain?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think it is as plain as language can make it. It says:

In addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; and to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among the Indians.

Mr. MONDELL. That does not control the appropriation in general, and in my opinion the Commissioner of Indian Affairs might hold, and is likely to hold, that he has no authority to use these funds for any other purpose than to conduct experiments on the farm. This is an important appropriation, and, as a matter of fact, it ought to be largely increased, and I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, personally I have no serious objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming. The language, however, in line 18, beginning with the words "for the employment of suitable persons" and ending on line 24, with the figures $300,000, certainly give them ample power to expend these moneys in aid of the individual allottees and give them ample power to go out in the field and aid individual Indians living on the allotments, showing them when to plant, when to sow, and when to reap, and when to cultivate, and all the other things that the individual Indians ought to know. I know from personal observation, from my own experience and actual contact with them, that that is the purpose for which this money is paid out, in at least that part of the country. think it is used for this purpose everywhere.

The justifications—we have five or six pages of reasons and explanations which disclose that the money has been and will be spent as the gentleman hopes for-are all to the effect that the money is actually used to assist the individual allottee.

We have adopted precisely the language that has been carried right along. There has been no complaint of it. The Indian Commissioner advocates it and says it works well, and it is the same language that was used last year.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire if the $300,000 is to pay for teaching Indians farming and rotation of crops, regardless of the age of the Indians?

Mr. MONDELL. What item is the gentleman from Oklahoma giving figures upon?

Mr. FERRIS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, the figures I quoted were wrong. I will give him the correct figures. The estimate is for $625,000. Last year we gave them $400,000. This year we give them $300,000. The increase they ask for was to create some new positions and to increase some salaries. The committee thought that we should not at the short session of Congress increase any salaries or create any new positions. I think there was something of this fund left over from last

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know what this $300,000 is intended for. Is it intended for teaching Indian children how to farm or old men how to farm?

Mr. FERRIS. Both, on their individual allotments. I think I replied to the gentleman partially a while ago what it is used The individual farmers are employed to go out to each Indian and show him when to plant and when to reap and when to sow and how to breed stock and how to improve stock, and so forth.

Mr. FOWLER. Regardless of the age of the Indian?
Mr. FERRIS. I think irrespective of age; that is, they teach the entire families and instruct them in all these things. The old Indians that are incompetent need education along these lines on their allotments the same as the children.

Last year we appropriated sixteen and one-half millions of dollars to educate white people in agriculture. Here we have $300,000 with which to educate the Indian people in agriculture. The language of the paragraph is just as it was last year. It works well. It should be continued. The language is that of the commissioner.

Mr. FOWLER. That provision for industrial schools I desire to inquire about. Does anybody attend them except children under 21 years of age?
Mr. FERRIS. I think not.

Mr. FOWLER. And this $300,000 is to go further than that?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. Mr. FOWLER. And instruct the Indians above the age of 21 years

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; those that live on their individual allot-They need the help more than words can tell. However, I would always limit it to incompetent ones.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there any provision under the law giving authority for making such appropriation?

Mr. FERRIS. I think the general installation of the Indian Bureau is to instruct not alone children, but incompetent Indians, whether they be between the ages of 6 and 21 years or between the ages of 21 years and 60 years, if they need the assistance of instruction in agricultural pursuits.

Mr. FOWLER. Has this amount or a similar amount been carried by the appropriation bills in past years for the same purpose:

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; and the language is identical with that We gave a smaller amount this year than was in former years. asked for. We allowed no increase of salaries; no new positions will be created. I think the paragraph is and will be acceptable to both the department and this Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mondell), there were—ayes 4, noes 27. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the sum of $300,000 in line 24, and inserting $400,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For witness fees and other legal expenses incurred in suits instituted in behalf of or against Indians involving the title to lands allotted to them, or the right of possession of personal property held by them, and in hearings set by United States local land officers to determine the rights of Indians to public lands, $2,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in the payment of attorney fees.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. This item provides for expenses incurred in suits instituted in behalf of or against Indians when the title is involved to lands allotted to them, and I think the bill of last year provided for the contingency of where there was some question raised respecting the title. Why is that left out? That is, the word "question" before the word "title" was left out.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a great many In-dians have gone on the public domain of the United States, as they have a right to do, and have taken up lands, the same as white men, under the same rules and regulations, and so forth. If the right of those Indians is contested in the local land offices and the matter should get into the courts, this is for the purpose of determining their right or title, whatever it may be, to the lands they have located.

Mr. FOSTER. Why was that word left out?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We thought it was unnecessary. Mr. Chairman, this is a very complicated Mr. MADDEN. question, and I think we ought to have between now and tomorrow morning to properly consider it. I therefore make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26874, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a request for unanimous consent on the part of the Committee on Rules to be discharged from further consideration of H. Res. 757, appointing a committee to attend the unveiling of a statue of Thomas Jefferson in St. Louis, and to have the same referred to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to ask that that go over for the present.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to: and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 19, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, Eleventh Annual Report of the Reclamation Service (H. Doc. No. 948); to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting estimates of urgent deficiencies in appropriations required by the Department of Public Health Service (H. Doc. No. 1181); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, authentic copy of a circular issued by the Nobel committee of the Norwegian Parliament furnishing information as to the distribution of the Nobel peace prize for the year 1913 (H. Doc. No. 1180); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, an authentic copy of the certificate of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice President appointed in the State of Kansas at the election held therein on November 5, 1912; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 19, 1912.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, now as always we are in Thy presence, as always, so now, we borrow strength from Thee. But now, our Father, we know ourselves to be in Thy presence, now we accept the strength and the opportunities of this day as gifts from Thee, which we in turn consecrate to Thy service. as we part for a season, do Thou watch over us and guard us from all evil. If it be Thy will, bring Thou us together again when, by Thy grace, we will again offer unto Thee the sincere gratitude of trusting and obedient hearts. Amen.

THOMAS B. CATRON, a Senator from the State of New Mexico, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. Crawford and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ELECTORS FOR PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. GALLINGER) laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, an authentic copy of the certificate of ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice President appointed in the State of Massachusetts at the election held therein on November 5, 1912, which was ordered to be filed.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, NAVY DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 986).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for inclusion in the legislative appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, under the title of "Contingent expenses, Navy Department," $17,875. which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

RECORD OF SALES OF COTTON (S. DOC. NO. 987).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of April 22, 1911, the report of sales of cotton to the Confederate States, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PAGE. I am compelled again to announce the continued illness of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. He is unable to be present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to withhold his motion until I can dispose of a matter of morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withhold his motion?

Mr. LODGE. I will withhold it for the Senator from Texas, but I can not do it again.

THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

Mr. BAILEY. I offer the following resolution, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The resolution (S. Res. 413) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That such a system of direct legislation as the initiative and referendum would establish is in conflict with the representative principle on which this Republic was founded, and would, if adopted, inevitably work a radical change in the character and structure of our Government.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution remain on the table, because at the Senate's convenience I desire to speak to it; and unless something occurs to prevent it I shall ask the Senate to hear me after the morning business on the 2d day of January.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table, subject to the call of the Senator from Texas.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On that I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

of the last sitting of the Senate as a Court of Impeachment.

The Secretary read the Journal of Wednesday's proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any inaccuracies in the Journal? If not, it will stand approved. Counsel for the respondent will proceed.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I wish to call attention to an error in the record of the proceedings of day before yesterday, on page 726 of the Congressional Record, in an expression by the witness Knapp. As it reads it says, "I remember that Capt. May said to me often, as I supposed," and so forth. It should read, "I remember that Capt. May said to me after," and so forth. I may say that I have called the attention of the Official Reporters to this, and they have shown me, by producing the copy sent to the Printing Office, that it was an error made in the Printing Office. The context shows clearly what was meant and that it is an error.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. It occurs on page 726, in the second column, a little above the middle of the page, and I think it is clearly an error and that the correction ought to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made in the permanent RECORD.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN W. PEALE.

John W. Peale, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) State your full name .- A. John W. Peale.

Q. Where do you live?-A. New York City.

Q. What is your business?—A. Coal business.
Q. In what branch of the coal business?—A. In both branches-anthracite and bituminous.

Q. Do you mine, or buy, or sell, or what?—A. We buy and sell anthracite and mine bituminous.

Q. Do you know the respondent here, Judge Archbald?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you know John Henry Jones, who has been a witness here ?- A. Yes, sir. I met both of them on Monday of this week.

Q. I wish to show you some correspondence, and see if you can identify it. In the first place I show you a letter dated March 8, 1911, purporting to have been written by John Henry Jones to you. I ask you whether you can identify that letter? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you receive that letter from John Henry Jones about the time it bears date?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I ask to have it marked for identification.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Please look at the letter I show you, dated March 23, 1911, purporting to be from Judge Archbald to you, and state whether or not you received that letter from him about the time it bears date.-A. (After examination.) Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Let the letter be marked for identification.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Please look at what purports to be a carbon copy of a letter dated March 30, 1911, addressed to Judge Archbald, and let me know whether that is a carbon copy of a letter which you sent to Judge Archbald about that time.-A. (After examination.) Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I ask that that be marked, please. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Finally, I show you a letter dated April 29, 1911, purporting to be from John Henry Jones to you, and ask you whether you received that letter from the writer about the time it bears date?—A. (After examination.) Yes, sir,

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Let that be marked, please. I now offer these four letters in evidence.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We desire to read them first. The PRESIDING OFFICER. If counsel has other questions to put to this witness, he may proceed while the managers are examining the letters

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Peale, have you any knowledge, as a man in the business in which you say you have been engaged, with respect to transactions relating to the purchase of coal property in the anthracite region about Scranton, where some persons put up all the cash, and the persons who merely find the property share with the other persons in the ultimate profits of the venture?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to this line of examina-tion as wholly immaterial. It is wholly immaterial what they do in other cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to counsel that that testimony has been adduced from a number of witnesses and so far has not been contested by the managers. There ought to be a limitation to evidence of that kind. It could be continued indefinitely. Counsel will recognize that fact.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. This is the last witness we expect to examine on this subject. If the managers will say

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With that statement by counsel the Chair suggests that he ask the same question that he asked other witnesses as to the practice.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. I asked him in the first place if he knew of any, and then I was going to ask him how

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Will you state whether you have personal knowledge of any such transactions?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Manager STERLING. We object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The manager objects. What is the objection?

Mr. Manager STERLING. On the ground that it is not at all material in this case what was done in reference to other

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Similar testimony has been elicited from a number of other witnesses. We would have to go back and rule it all out if the objection were insisted upon and sustained.

Mr. Manager STERLING. If I am not mistaken, the Chair yesterday ruled against this kind of testimony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the testimony was admitted. The Chair did suggest that it would be better for counsel to inquire of the witness to what extent he had known that, in order that the Senate might judge whether or not it was general rather than to have the witness testify that it was general. That was the extent of the ruling.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I will say that, while we know nothing about it and contend that it is wholly immaterial, we are willing to admit that other cases of that kind have occurred; how many, I do not know. I do not suppose the witness knows how many. If the Chair holds that it is competent, we are willing to say now that we have no doubt it has been done in other cases.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We started out on this inquiry by asking the witnesses if it was the custom, as customs are known, and it was ruled that we could not ask about the general custom, but had to bring out particular instances-how many they knew of-and that is why we are pursuing this line of inquiry.

Mr. Manager STERLING. May I ask counsel what is the purpose of this testimony?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Evidence is offered on the part of the managers and in one of the articles of impeachment, article No. that Judge Archbald in connection with John Henry Jones, Mr. Bell, and Mr. Petersen had entered into an arrangement by which they were to get considerable interest in Packer No. 3 dump without putting up any money.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The

The Chair will permit the question unless the managers

Mr. Manager STERLING. Will the Chair hear me just briefly on that point? I do not want to unnecessarily take

That does not go to the question which is involved in this count at all. What Mr. Petersen and John Henry Jones might have done and what they did do I have no doubt was perfectly proper in this transaction. Those gentlemen are private citizens, and they had a right to go to the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. or any other company they saw fit and persuade the railco, or any other company they saw ht and persuade the rair-road company to sell them this property, and it would not con-stitute an offense. It would not constitute even bad practice in a private citizen. But for Judge Archbald to do it, being a judge and using his influence to persuade railroad companies to do this, is the offense charged in this count.

Now, unless Mr. Worthington can prove that it is the practice and the custom among judges in Pennsylvania and elsewhere to make transactions of this kind, the evidence does not relate to the count at all. For that reason we object,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the sugges tions of counsel address themselves to the question of the weight which shall be given to the testimony and the effect of it, rather than to its admissibility. The testimony is admitted.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) State how many such transactions you had had personal knowledge of, Mr. Peale .- A. I have advanced the money myself twice, and I know of several other instances

Q. May I ask if with one of those the Marian Coal Co. had anything to do?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was that?-A. I advanced the Marian Coal Co.

$35,000.
Q. Was that dump in operation when you purchased it?—A. I did not purchase it. I loaned $35,000.
Q. You loaned the money to operate it?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Manager STERLING. Is that all?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all on that point. I want now to read these letters in evidence.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to them as immaterial. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Let me have the letters.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. WEBB has them now.

We think they are not material at all, but we withdraw any objection to them if it will save time.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We do not consider it material whether the managers think the letters are material or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letters will be read from the desk

The Secretary read as follows:

SCRANTON, PA., March 8, 1911.

Mr. John W. Peale, No. 1 Broadway, New York City.

No. 1 Broadway, New York City.

Dear Sir: In reply to yours to hand would say that the coal dump referred to is a going concern. I give you the following detail: It is estimated that there is from 300,000 to 400,000 merchantable coal in the dump. There is a washery on the property, with a capacity of 500 tons per day. They are now shipping 20 cars daily. The property would be delivered free from debt for the sum of $75,000.

The owners feel they would not care to have it generally known in the trade that their property is on the market, therefore would like our parties, if interested, to act for themselves and not go from place to place offering same for sale. We have assured them that this would not be done.

I would like to have you call at Judge R. W. Archbald's office in the Federal building, Scranton, at your earliest convenience or have some one delegated to do so, and the judge would go into the matter of negotiation with you at once, he having the power to sell.

The property is located not far from Shamokin, or Shenandoah. It is really first class.

Yours, very truly,

J. Henry Jones.

[U. S. S. Exhibit Y.]

(R. W. Archbald, district judge, United States courts, middle district of Pennsylvania, Scranton.) SCRANTON, March 23, 1911.

JOHN W. PEALE, Esq.

JOHN W. Peale, Esq.

Dear Sir: I regret to learn through your letter to Mr. John Henry Jones, of this city, that I was out when you called to see me about the culm-dump washery about which he wrote you recently. This dump is located at Shaft, near Shenandoah, Pa., and is the property of the Oxford Coal Co. Mr. Jones has given you the price and the particulars. It is a going property, with plenty of coal left in the dump, and with more in the vicinity. I believe, although I am not sure about the latter. I have to go to Washington on April I to attend a session of the Commerce Court, of which I am a member, and hope that you will be able to let us know something as to your intentions in the matter before I leave.

I expect to be at home here at Scranton every day until that time, and if I do not happen to be at my office, I can be readily summoned.

Yours, very truly,

R. W. ARCHBALD.

[U. S. S. Exhibit Z.]

NEW YORK, March 30, 1911.

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

Scranton, Pa.

Dear Sir: Pardon delay in reply to yours of the 23d instant, which is due to my absence, and sorry that I was unable to see you when I was at Scranton the week before last. I note the culm bank mentioned by Mr. Jones and am fairly well acquainted with this Oxford proposition, which I examined before purchased by its present owner. There is so much rock mixed with the coal in this dump that I do not believe it could be worked to advantage, at least that was my conclusion when I examined it several years ago. Therefore, while I am obliged to you for writing me on the subject, I do not believe that it would be a profitable venture for me to take up at this time.

Truly, yours,

[U. S. S. Exhibit AA.]

(J. Henry Jones. Expert reports furnished on timber, rubber, and plantations, 318 Twelfth Avenue.)

SCRANTON, PA., April 29, 1911.

J. HENRY JONES.

Mr. John W. Peale,

No. 1 Broadway, New York.

Dear Sir: Yesterday I invited Mr. Winn to accompany me on a dump or an old filling between plane No. 4 and No. 5 of the old gravity which is located between Virginia and Rocky Glen on the Laurel line running between Scranton and Wilkes-Barre. The filling is a very excellent one, and Winn took a sample of it in order to forward same to you. It is estimated at various figures; some claim there is 125,000 tons, others ranging from S0,000 to 100,000 tons; but I think the most accurate figure would be about 60,000 tons merchantable coal. The option on the property is held by Judge Archbald and myself, and we wanted to make you the following proposition: That if you will advance $12,500 on the understanding that you are to receive this amount back in coal or royalty, as we will agree upon, that you are to receive 45 per cent of the stock which would be figured at a capitalization of not exceeding $25,000. All chestnut and a certain quantity of pea coal could be shipped to your orders and loaded at a switch near by on the Laurel line, which transfers to the D., L. & W. While in reality all the small sizes can be sold by the company to the Sagwolt Silk Mill, the Lackawanna Woolen Mills, and other concerns of this city. While the pea coal could be all delivered at Minooka for local trade at a good profit, the distance for delivery being less than a mile. Could you spend few hours some day next week to accompany the judge and myself on the dump I am satisfied that you will be readily convinced that it will be a big money maker for all parties concerned.

Thanking you in anticipation of an early reply, I remain, dear sir, Yours, very truly,

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) In reference, Mr. Peale, to this letter, which has been marked "Exhibit X," of March 8, 1911, from John Henry Jones to you, I wish yon would identify the dump which is referred to when he says, "I give you the following detail. It is estimated that there is from 300,000 to 400,000 merchantable coal in the dump." Do you want to look at the letter?-A. That is the Oxford dump.

Q. Have you personal knowledge as to whether that is the so-called Oxford dump which is near the Packer dumps of the Lehigh Valley or the Girard estate?—A. I do not know anything about where the Packer dumps are a fall.

thing about where the Packer dumps are at all.

Q. In this letter of April 29, 1911, from Jones to you, there is a mention of a fill. Are you able to identify that piece of property?—A. No, sir; I do not know where it is. I never looked at it it all looked at it at all.

Q. It is referred to as the "old gravity, which is located between Virginia and Rocky Glen, on the Laurel line." You do not know just what that was?—A. I do not know. I never have seen it; no, sir.

Q. You did not proceed with that matter?—A. I did not proceed with it at all.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. That is all, Mr. President, I think for this witness at present.

Cross-examination:

- Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. Peale, where is this Oxford dump?-A. I do not remember. I could not describe to you where it is, because it has been some time ago, and I do not really remember. It was near some station on the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad.
- Q. You stated in one of these letters that you had seen it at one time?—A. Yes, sir; I had been there at one time.

Q. But you forget where it was?—A. I forget what station on the Reading road it was.
Q. At the time of this correspondence which has been read I understand that John Henry Jones and Judge Archbald owned that dump. Is that your understanding from the correspondence?—A. I think so; yes, sir.

Q. Did they own it or just have an option on it?—A. I really do not know that.

Q. Who owned it before them?-A. I think it was originally operated by the North American Coal Co.

Q. What railroad company is the North American Coal Co. connected with?-A. I do not think any, sir.

Q. Do you know where Jones and Archbald got this dump?-A. I do not; no, sir.

Q. Do you know how long they had had it?-A. I do not;

Q. As a matter of fact, you understood they simply had an option on it and were holding the option until they sold it?-A. I presumed so.

Q. From whom did they get it, do you know?-A. I really do

Q. You say that you have known personally of two other transactions where persons bought coal dumps and got some other party to furnish the money on certain terms?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Judge Archbald a party to either of them?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Was any other judge in Pennsylvania or elsewhere concerned in it at all?-A. I do not think so; no, sir.

Q. Those two that you know of were obtained from the rail-road company without the use of Judge Archbald's influence or any other judge's influence?-A. I do not think they were obtained from railroad companies.

Q. They never did belong to railroad companies?-A. I do not think so, sir.

- Q. They belonged to mining companies?-A. I think so.
- Q. Do you know of your own knowledge of any other instances of transactions of that kind where persons bought dumps but bought them of railroad companies—interstate railroad companies-without the influence of Judge Archbald?-A. I do not know of any that were obtained from railroad companies, except dumps obtained from the Central Railroad of New Jersey by the North American Coal Co.

Q. Is that the one--A. There were several-

Q. That Jones and Judge Archbald afterwards owned?-A. No. sir.

Q. Your name is John W. Peale?-A. Yes, sir

Q. You are the same party who was plaintiff in the Peale case that was pending in the Federal court at Scranton?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Against the Marian Coal Co.?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. The correspondence which has been read was had during the time that case was pending, was it not, or had the case been disposed of?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit that it is shown by the record when the suit was brought and when it was pending.

Mr. Manager STERLING. It is much easier for this witness to state it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit that it is much easier to tell the dates from the record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it already in evidence?

Mr. Manager STERLING. I do not think it is. I do not

Mr. WORTHINGTON. All these letters, Mr. President, bear date after Judge Archbald had left-

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, I object to the attorney interfering. If he has an objection, let him state it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the objection to the question?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to endeavoring to fix dates by the recollection of the witness, when they are exactly fixed by the record already put in evidence.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The

The record is the highest evidence.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I did not hear the remark of the President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair says the record is the highest evidence, of course.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We are entitled to have this wit-ness's recollection with reference to the time it occurred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no objection to asking as to the relative date, or anything of that kind, whether before or since.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) This correspondence occurred during the time this case was pending in the Federal court?—A. Let me see. That correspondence, I think, was March, 1911, and I think the decision in that case was in August, 1911.

Q. It was before the case was disposed of?-A. Yes; I think so.

Q. And it was after Judge Archbald had overruled the demurrer in that case, was it not?-A. I do not know anything about the demurrer, sir. That was entirely—Q. You do not know about that?—A. No, sir.

Q. What railroad company was it that owned this dump which was sold to the North American Coal Co.?—A. I think it was the Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Q. Has it any lines in Pennsylvania?-A. Yes, sir. Q. Into the coal fields of Pennsylvania?-A. Yes, sir.

- And goes to this dump?-A. What dump do you refer to? The one that Jones and Judge Archbald owned-A. Oh, I think not.
 - Q. Or had an option on?—A. I think not. Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Peale, I think you have said you have visited this Oxford dump?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember who was in control of it at the time you made your visit?-A. I do not remember the man's name. think it was some engineer at Scranton.

Q. Do you remember the name of Madeira, Hill & Co.?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that it?-A. No; Madeira, Hill & Co., I understood, bought it after that.

Q. Oh, after that?-A. After I had seen it.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. W. P. Boland owned it at that time?-A. Well, he may have had an interest in it. I do not know.

Q. You did not know?-A. No, sir.

Q. You say none of these cases in which money was advanced to get coal property were in the matter of coal property that came from railroads? From whom did the Marian Coal Co.'s dump come?—A. It was three undivided interests, I believe the Hoysradt estate, the Felts estate, and the D. & L. Railroad Co.

Q. The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co.?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. They had sold their interest in that dump, or leased it, at least?—A. No; I think at that time the Marian Coal Co. had leased only all the interest of the Felts estate, an undivided interest.

Q. You took over the management of that dump?—A. No, sir. Q. Or the sale of the coal?—A. I did not.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair permits this examination simply because objection has not been made.
Mr. Manager STERLING. We will object now.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. It seems to be going to a great extent.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The Chair will remember that it was on cross-examination this witness was asked if he was the Peale of the Marian Coal Co. I had not asked—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had reference to the examination prior to that time. The Chair thinks all this testimony about the Oxford matter is entirely irrelevant, and he does not exclude it, only because no objection has been made to The Chair does not feel that he is justified in excluding it without an objection made to it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was not asking the witness about the Oxford dump. It was about the Marian Coal Co. I was asking him when I was interrupted just now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not think that those letters were material or admissible.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We had not been heard on that subject, and probably the Chair—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not propose to rule them out. He is simply stating what seems to be very clear to him.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I understood the Chair to say they would have been excluded if objection had been made. The Chair certainly could not have done that without knowing the object for which they were offered. We consider them a very important and material part of this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will not make any ruling in regard to it. The Chair simply desires, if possible, to arrest what appears to be an unduly extended examination.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Well, we are through with the witness, Mr. President.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire.

TESTIMONY OF MICHAEL W. SCANLON.

Michael W. Scanlon appeared, and, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Give your full name, please.—A. Michael W. Scaulon.
Q. You live here in Washington?—A. About 12 years.
Q. You are connected with what hotel?—A. The Grafton.

Q. The Grafton Hotel, at Connecticut Avenue and De Sales Street, this city?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you connected with that hotel in the spring of 1912?—A. I have been; yes, sir.

Q. In what capacity were you then connected with that hotel?-A. Chief clerk.

Q. Have you brought with you any information which will enable us to show at what time, if at all, Judge Archbald was stopping at that hotel in the spring of 1912?-A. (Producing paper.) Yes, sir; a leaf from our ledger.

Q. I do not care for the paper itself. Can you tell us?-A.

Very good, sir.

Q. During what time was he stopping at your hotel last spring from that?

Mr. Manager WEBB. May we ask the object of this testimony? If he is going to read that long list, it will be a waste of time unless it is material.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not expect the witness to read any long list, but just to state whether Judge Archbald was stopping at that hotel in Washington during certain days in April last, and they happen to be days when the Bradley contract was about to be completed and was recalled.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is wholly immaterial. have never charged that he was anywhere else. We have never charged that Judge Archbald was in Scranton at that

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will permit the evidence in explanation to show where the respondent was at the time.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Now, will you answer the question, please. At what time was Judge Archbald stopping at your hotel last spring?—A. He arrived on the 12th of April for dinner and left on the 20th.

Q. The 20th of the same month?-A. Yes, sir; April,

Q. Can you state whether he was there continuously or not?—A. Yes, sir; he was, to the best of my knowledge, sir.
Q. Do not your books show?—A. I received him personally and roomed him and saw him daily from the time he arrived until he departed.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, the testimony seems to prove he was not there at the date this contract was rescinded—the 11th of April.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a matter of argument. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I do not recall the dates you spoke of. Between what dates?-A. He arrived on the 12th of April.

Q. And remained until when?-A. Until the morning of the 20th, after breakfast.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The rest of the time we will cover by the evidence of another hotel. Judge Archbald changed his residence from one hotel to another. That is all we wish to ask this witness.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is discharged.

TESTIMONY OF T. ELLSWORTH DAVIES

T. Ellsworth Davies appeared, and, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Ellsworth Davies is your name?—A. T. Ellsworth Davies.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Davies?—A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. How long have you lived there?-A. Forty-four yearsall my life.

Q. What is your business?—A. Mining engineer.

Q. How long have you been a mining engineer?—A. I began about 15 years of age.

Q. And how continuously have you been engaged in the business of a mining engineer?—A. Practically ever since.
Q. Practically all the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Where?-A. At Scranton.

Q. What position do you hold now, if any?—A. I am the official mining engineer for Lackawanna and Luzerne Counties and Susquehanna County, and consulting engineer for the State tax board of Pennsylvania.

· Q. What do you mean by saying you are mining engineer for those counties? What are your duties?—A. To fix areas and conditions and appraise the valuation of coal in the ground.

improvements, and so on.

Q. What other position do you say you hold?-A. Consulting engineer for the State tax board.

Q. What are your duties as such, in a general way?-A. To fix values.

Q. Of coal property?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever visit the Katydid coal dump near Moosic, Pa.?—A. Yes; I did one time, about a year ago.

Q. For what purpose?-A. For the purpose of examining and reporting on it.

Q. For your own use or at the request of somebody else?—A.

At the request of a party from New York.

Q. Who was the party?—A. A man by the name of Hanley.

Q. What kind of an investigation or examination of that dump did you then make?-A. I spent two hours going over the ground and looking at the dump-looking at the dump from every standpoint and every side.

Q. What conclusion did you reach?—A. I reached——Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, we object, for the reason that this witness has not qualified to testify about the

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It appears this is a man who was employed by several of those counties up there and by the State for the purpose of valuing coal property for taxation, and has for several years, and besides has been engaged in business 35 or 40 years for himself. He went and examined this bank for the very purpose of determining its value there as the advisor of a prospective purchaser. He certainly had as much information about it as anything here tends to show Judge Archbald had. As it was stated here yesterday by one of the managers, the main thing is about Judge Archbald's information and views about this matter at the time he entered into the transaction in connection with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the counsel can show by the witness the value of the dump, but as to whether the witness shall state his general conclusions or state what he found there is possibly a matter of some doubt. The Chair will suggest that counsel examine the witness as to what he found.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I asked him to state the result of his investigation, and by that I mean what he found there, and also as to what he found there was worth-the character of the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the witness is prepared to state the value of it after examination, the Chair thinks that counsel is entitled to bring that out.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) State, in the first place, what you found there.-A. I found about 90,000 tons of material, vein and vein matter, in the bank, scattered about in four or five separate banks, with a large bank of silt near by.

Q. What do you mean by "vein and vein matter," Mr. Davies?—A. Well, the coal and the refuse as it came from the

Q. You found about 90,000 tons there altogether?-A. I did, sir: to the best of my judgment.

Q. Did you investigate it and reach a conclusion as to what proportion of that 90,000 tons could be utilized for the market?-A. Yes; I found that it would contain about 50 to 55 per cent, not more than 60 per cent, of all sizes of coal that could be taken out of it.

Q. What proportion of those did you estimate were sizes of what are called prepared sizes, above pea?-A. I did not find that it ran more than 1½ to 2 per cent of chestnut.

Q. Did you reach a conclusion also as to about what the dump was worth?—A. I did.

Q. As it stood and as it stands?-A. I reported to my people that they should not touch it.

Q. Why?—A. Because it was not worth the money asked. Q. What was asked?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness can state what in his opinion was the value.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well; that is what I want to

The WITNESS. From $2,500 to $3,000.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Now, Mr. Davies, do you know Mr. Von Storch, who is a lawyer and banker in Scranton?-A. Mr. Charles H. Von Storch?

Q. Yes, sir.-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know John Henry Jones?-A I do.

Q. Do you remember any occurrence in relation to a $500 note in which you and they figured?—A. I do.

- Q. Tell us about that, please.—A. In the latter part of November or the beginning of December of last year John Henry Jones came to me with a note and asked me if I knew where he could have it discounted—cashed. I told him I did not know at the time, and he went away. In a day or two I met him on the street again. I said to him, "Have you taken that to Charlie Von Storch's bank? Go and see Charlie Von Storch." He said, "I do not know him." We were then within a block of Mr. Von Storch's office. I said, "I will go with you." I went with him and introduced him to Mr. Von Storch, and left That is all I know about it.
- Q. What do you say was the date of that occurrence, according to your recollection?-A. I think it was the latter part of November or the beginning of December, 1911.

Q. Are you clear about the year?-A. No; 1909. I beg your

Q. What motive or information had you which led you to suggest taking that note to Von Storch?-A. I had none whatever.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to the evidence as im-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness says he had none. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. [To the witness:] What communication, direct or indirect, had you with Judge Archbald?-A. None whatever, sir.

Q. And what had he to do with your suggestion in taking that note to Von Storch?—A. Not any. I had not seen Judge Archbald for a year, perhaps, before that.

Q. Did you see the note?—A. No; I do not think I did.

Q. Did anything of that kind happen more than once?-A. No. Sir.

Q. Do you know whether Judge Archbald was on the note? Was anything said about that?-A. No, sir; I can not say that I do know Judge Archbald was on the note.

Q. Do you know whether John Henry Jones was on the note?-A. John Henry Jones told me that he had a note indorsed by a party, and he would like to know where to take it.

Q. What do you know about John Henry Jones? What was his position at that time?-A. John Henry Jones was then connected with the Maplewood Lumber Co., if I remember aright.

Q. Connected in what way?-A. He was a stockholder and, I think, secretary of the company.

Q. In a general way, is that a small or a large company?-A. That was a concern that did business

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object, Mr. President, to this

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Well, the learned managers put Von Storch on the stand and asked him about John Henry Jones and elicited the statement by Von Storch that John Henry Jones was a man of such appearance that he doubted whether the note which he brought there was Judge Archbald's signature or if it did not have the forged signature, thereby implying, I suppose, that John Henry Jones is such a character that for Judge Archbald to have anything to do with him implies guilt on his part. John Henry Jones is to be the next witness, and Senators can judge of his appearance, and his business, and so forth, can be stated by him. I want to show by this witness, who knows all about Mr. Jones, that he is not such a man as that Judge Archbald or anybody else in Scranton might not have business with and be on notes with him without any reflection on his judgment or his conduct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not informed as to the evidence to which counsel refers. Of course, if there was evidence to that effect counsel would be entitled to show to the contrary. The Chair is not informed as to whether or not that is in the record.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will read it, at the top of page 769 of the record in this trial, from Von Storch's evidence:

Q. Why did you suspect this note when it was brought to you by John Henry Jones?—A. I did not think that a man of John Henry Jones's appearance would be carrying Judge Archbald's note around.

He had already said that he suspected it was a forgery, and being asked why he suspected that he answered:

I did not think that a man of John Henry Jones's appearance would be carrying Judge Archbald's note around.

Now, necessarily that must carry to the minds of Senators the notion that for Judge Archbald to be having business transactions, or to be in a transaction on which his name and the name of John Henry Jones were on a note—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not desire to hear further from counsel on that.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I think the fact is, if I remember, the testimony which counsel has read was in the direct examination.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is in the direct examination by the managers

Mr. Manager STERLING. It is in the direct examination. Now counsel intimates that the managers had caused Von Storch to elicit the fact that Jones was a man of bad appearance. Counsel himself called that evidence out. Now he brings this witness on to sustain the character of the man whom his own witness impeached.

Mr. SIMPSON. It was your witness, Mr. Manager Sterling.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I know, but you called it out.
Mr. Manager STERLING. You called it out.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. You called him as a witness; we

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It was called out by the managers. God forbid that we should call that out about John Henry Jones.

Mr. Manager STERLING. You just stated, did you not-Mr. WORTHINGTON. You said that was on direct examina-tion, and I said "yes."

Mr. Manager STERLING. In any event, how can what this witness thinks of John Henry Jones be material?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We are not going to prove what he thinks of him, but what he knows his position and standing in Scranton are.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I should like to say what I have got to say, if counsel will give me an opportunity. It is not very much.

John Henry Jones testified to all these things himself. He told what lumber companies he had been interested in, but that does not give him a good character. What this gentleman may say about his appearance does not give him a good character or anything of the kind. It is utterly immaterial to any issue in

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will admit the evidence.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Davies, what position, if you know, did John Henry Jones hold in Scranton at that time?-A. At present?

Q. At the time of this transaction and since?--A. At that time he was promoting some lumber companies. He was connected with two or three, I think. I think there was another lumber company or two that he was connected with.

Q. You said he was secretary of some company?—A. I think he was secretary at the time of the Maplewood Lumber Co.

Q. I was about to ask you, when interrupted, whether that was a large or a small concern.—A. It was a concern, as I understand it, that sold quite a little timber and lumber for breaker building, washery construction, and so forth.

Q. Has he held any official position in Scranton?—A. Yes; for the last year or two he has been a chief clerk in the county commissioner's office there in charge of the county assessments.

Q. And holds that position now?-A. He does, sir. Q. Has he been at any time a man of property there in Scranton?—A. Oh, yes; I think so; I believe so. He owns his own home, and I think he had some other property there

Q. Let me ask you this question, which you need not answer: Whether, until now, you ever intimated that on account of his appearance and standing there it was a disgrace to anybody to have business with him or to be seen with him?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object. Mr. WORTHINGTON. It has gone so far here that the wit-ess, Von Storch, intimated that he was led to the conclusion that Judge Archbald's name on this note was a forgery, because John Henry Jones brought it to him.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We will admit that it was not a forgery. We have claimed all the time that it was Judge Arch-bald's signature to this note. He signed it himself. There has never been any pretense on our part that it was a forgery.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am not talking about whether it was a forgery or not, but whether it was a justification for the suspicion that it was a forgery because John Henry Jones's name was connected with it.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I do not know how you can better prove it than to prove that it was not a forgery, which we

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair permitted the counsel to prove the business character of Mr. Jones, but it is not proper to put in evidence the opinion of the witness.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Well, then, I will not pursue the matter further, and the managers may cross-examine.

Cross-examination:

- (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Your name is Davies?-Yes, sir.
- Q. Are you a banker?—A. No, sir; I am a mining engineer. Q. John Henry Jones met you on the street one day with a
- $500 note, and wanted you to cash it?—A. He did; yes.
 Q. And asked you if you knew where he could cash it?—A.
 That is, he told me had a note for several hundred dollars. I did not know it was for $500. He told me it was a note for several hundred dollars, and wanted to know where he could cash it.
- Q. You did not know whether it was Judge Archbald's note or not?-A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. And you do not know whether it was for $500 or not?-A. I could not swear that it was.

Q. You answered Mr. Worthington that Jones did meet you and asked where he could cash a $500 note. Did he?—A. If I said that I made a misstatement. I meant a note for several hundred dollars.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I move that the testimony of this witness be stricken out, because there is no proof that it relates to the note in question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We can not prove everything at I think it is sufficient now to identify the transaction. John Henry Jones will be the next witness, and he will not leave any doubt as to whether it was this note.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will permit the testimony to stand for the present, at least.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Did Jones tell you he had been trying to cash the note?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. And you told him you did not know where he could cash it?—A. I did not, then; no.

Q. And you met him the next day and told him that Von Storch might cash it?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You understood from what he had told you that he had been hawking that note around Scranton for some time?-A. No, sir; he never told me that he had.

Q. And he could not find anybody who would cash the $500 note-Mr. Jones's note with Judge Archbald's name on it?-A. No, sir; I did not know that he had.

Q. You went with him, then, to Von Storch's law office and introduced him to Von Storch?-A. I did.

Q. And Von Storch called up Judge Archbald?—A. Not in my presence. I introduced him and then left.
Q. You left then, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In looking over this dump you found there were 90,000 tons of material in it?—A. I figured it; yes, sir.

Q. You thought it would measure or test out some 55 or 65 per cent of coal?—A. Yes, sir; about that.
Q. That would make about 54,000 or 55,000 tons of coal in it, would it not?—A. Yes, it would; in that neighborhood.
Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is excused.

MICHAEL W. SCANLON-RECALLED.

Mr. Manager WEBB. We should like to recall Mr. Scanlon

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As a witness for the managers?

stand a few moments ago. He is the clerk at the Grafton Hotel. We merely wish to ask him one question.

Michael W. Scanlon, having been previously sworn, was re-called and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Scanlon, from your record what hour of the day or what time of the day did Judge Archbald arrive at your hotel?—A. Just before dinner. Our dinner hour is from 6 to 8.

Q. He arrived for the evening meal?-A. For the evening

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all, Mr. President. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Was he alone or in company with some one else?-A. Mrs. Archbald was with him.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN HENRY JONES.

John Henry Jones, having been previously sworn, was further examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Your name is John Henry Jones?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have already been examined as a witness in this case?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. How are you at present engaged? What is your present business?-A. I am in charge of the assessment department for Lackawanna County.

Q. Is that an appointive or an elective office?—A. It is an appointive office.

Q. You were appointed by whom?—A. By the county commissioners

Q. How long have you held that office?-A. Since the 1st of January

Q. Before that what was your business or vocation?-A. Various jobs in the clerical line-bookkeeping or anything of that nature.

Q. Have you been at any time connected with any lumber companies or anything of that kind?—A. I have.

Q. Just state in a very general way what companies and in what way you were connected with them .- A. I was secretary and stockholder in two companies.

Q. Give the names of them, please.—A. The Maplewood Lumber Co. and the Paupac Lumber Co.

Q. And those companies were engaged in business where?— A. In Wayne County, Pa.

Q. How far is that from Lackawanna County?-A. Well, from the city of Scranton to where our offices were, one of them would probably be in the neighborhood of 18 miles and the other about 35 miles.

Q. Mr. Jones, did you at any time have anything to do in connection with Judge Archbak in relation to a dump called the Oxford dump?—A. I believe I did.

Q. What do you recollect about that so far as Judge Archbald's connection with it is concerned?-A. Well, my recol'action is this: That a certain party came to me one day and said that there was a dump or a going concern that could be gotten down somewhere near Shenandoah, and I found out as to who the owner was and mentioned the matter to Judge Archbald.

Q. You mentioned the matter to Judge Archbald?-A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. Go on and tell us what followed so far as his connection with it was concerned .- A. My imprecsion is that Judge Archbald opened up negotiations with the owner and got the right to offer it for sale. He was acting at my request.

Q. Who was the party who first spoke to you about it? You said "a party"—who was it?—A. If my memory serves me right, it was a man named Gray.

Q. Well, go on and tell about what took place with relation to that Oxford dump matter.—A. I think the judge said that I could offer it for sale, and I wrote a letter, I think, to Mr. Peale on the subject, and when I received his reply it was of such a nature that it ended there, so far as I was concerned.

I wish you would look at this letter, which is U. S. S. Exhibit X in this case, a letter dated March 8, 1911, from you to Mr. Peale, and I will ask you if that is the letter you wrote to Mr. Peale and sent to him about that date in connection with this matter?-A. (After examining letter.) Yes, sir; that is the letter.

Q. I will show you a letter dated April 29, 1911, purporting to be signed by you and addressed to Mr. Peale, and being "U. S. S. Exhibit AA" in this case, and will ask you if you wrote that letter and sent it to Mr. Peale at about the time the letter bears date?-A. Yes, sir; but this is pertaining to another matter.

Q. Yes; I am going to ask you about that; but before I take up the other matter I want to finish what there is to say about Mr. Manager WEBB. No; the witness has just left the the Oxford dump. You have told us that you took the matter to Judge Archbald and he authorized you to offer it for sale,

I think you said?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Go on and tell what followed .- A. I wrote a letter to Mr. John W. Peale, whom I knew and had known for 11 years, and I placed the matter, as the letter states, before him as a business proposition. His reply was such—he had already— Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, we think the best evidence is the letters which counsel have introduced, and we need no explanation of them.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. His reply is here, so we need not bother about that. [To the witness:] Go on and state what followed after the negotiations with Peale.

The Witness. After I received Mr. Peale's reply? Q. Yes.—A. That ended it, so far as I was concerned.

Q. Do you remember anything in connection with a man named Connor?

Mr. Manager WEBB. We object.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. Well, I believe there is—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The manager objects. What is the objection?

Mr. Manager WEBB. That it is immaterial and has nothing to do with the case, so far as we can possibly see. A question is asked about a man by the name of Connor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the question?

WORTHINGTON. I suppose anything irrelevant which relates to a man named Connor, but nothing has appeared except Mr. Connor's name. I want to ask also whether an effort was made to sell to him on behalf of Judge Archbald this witness?

Mr. Manager WEBB. We object to that. It does not make any difference to whom they undertook to sell the Oxford dump. It is irrelevant and immaterial. We are discussing the Katydid dump and culm bank No. 3; and to whom he offered to sell the Oxford dump is an entirely different proposition and is wholly immaterial

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Well, Mr. President, we despair of finding anything that seems to the managers to be relevant, but I ask to call the attention of the Chair and of the Senate to what one of the issues in this case is. It is charged in the third article that Judge Archbald wrongfully, corruptly, and unlawfully applied to the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. for the privile ilege of leasing from the Girard estate, with the consent of the company, Packer No. 3 dump; and it is charged in another article that after Judge Archbald became a member of the Commerce Court he formed a scheme to go to work and apply to other railroads to get all the culm dumps he could, using his influence as a judge to get them. We have shown as to one of the two cases in which he was concerned-the Katydid culm dump-that the suggestion of his being interested in that came from Mr. William P. Boland through Mr. Williams, and that it was not anything which was formed in his own mind. As to this dump, the answer sets up that Judge Archbald had entered into-I was about to state what my recollection is of the answer, but my associate says it is not in the answer. think it is. But whether it is in the answer or not, it is part of our reply to that article. Judge Archbald had become interested, in the way which has already appeared, in the Oxford dump, with which no railroad had had anything whatever to do, and was negotiating to sell that or to form a company to operate it when his attention was called, as will appear, to the fact that there was, across the creek from the Oxford damp, this Packer No. 3 dump, or the Packer dumps; and in that way he was led by force of circumstances or by a chain of circumstances, being advised that the Oxford dump and Packer No. 3 dump could be worked profitably together when the Oxford dump could not be worked profitably by itself, to endeavor to secure that dump.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inquire of counsel if he offers this in support of his contention against article 3?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Article 3. I have already said, Mr. President, that I am informed by my associate that I am mistaken in what I was about to say is in the answer. We do not, of course, have to set up all the details of the evidence in the answer. The answer does deny that the respondent unlawfully, or corruptly, or maliciously, or wickedly, or whatever those adverbs are, undertook to use his influence as a judge to induce railroad companies to consent to his securing a lease.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does this testimony relate to Packer No. 3?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. All the testimony relating to the Oxford dump is to show how Judge Archbald was led to become interested in Packer No. 3. The witness, Thomas Star Jones, has already given considerable evidence along this very same line when on the witness stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it is for that purpose it would fall within the terms of the article. The Chair understood counsel to say that there was a general charge as to endeavoring to lease a number of culm dumps. That is not in article 3.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is in the last article. After setting forth various alleged improper dealings about culm duinps, then there is a general charge in the last article that as soon as Judge Archbald became a judge of the Commerce Court he formed in his mind the intention to go to the railroads which would have business before the Commerce Court and get culm dumps from them. We have succeeded in showing two cases—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel will proceed if the purpose is to elucidate the manner in which the respondent was induced to become interested in Packer No. 3.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is precisely the object, Mr. President.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Did you have any communication with Thomas Star Jones about this Oxford dump?-A.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel will

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, Thomas Star Jones has already been examined in reference to his connection with It is impossible to show how Judge Archbald was led up to this without connecting the different parts of it together. [To the witness:] What did you say about Thomas Star Jones?—A. I met Tom Star Jones in the post-office building one day and he asked me whether I knew of a dump that he could secure somewhere; that he had a purchaser ready; that he was delegated to locate one for him. I told Jones that l was informed that there was one, and I named the Oxford to him.

Q. Was that after or before you had been in communication with Judge Archbald about the Oxford dump?-A. After had asked the judge to see whether I could have the right to sell and after I had written to Mr. Peale. That is my best recollection.

Q. After Mr. Peale had turned down the proposition?-A.

Yes, sir; after he had turned it down.

Q. Have you any recollection or knowledge as to Packer No. 3 dump being mentioned afterwards in connection with the Oxford dump?-A. I have not.

Q. You were not concerned with that yourself?—A. No, sir. Q. Now, did you have anything to do with the matter of the old gravity fill of which the Lacoe & Shiffer Co. were formerly the owners?-A. I did.

Q. In connection with Judge Archbald?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, tell us all about that Mr. Jones.-A. That fill was called to my attention, if I remember correctly, somewhere about February, March, or April, 1911, by a man named Fred Jones. He and I worked together on the tax duplicates, and one day he told me he knew where there was a good fill, and that if I could secure it he had a purchaser that was ready to hand over the cash and buy it the next day; that he had been trying to secure it, and could not. That was his story to me. He took me and showed me the fill. Of course, I had known the fill before I knew Fred Jones, so far as showing me anything I did not know was concerned; but when we started. I did not know where he was going. I located the owner or the man with whom I could get in touch from a man who lived there, and not from any information that Fred Jones gave me as to whom I should communicate with. I found it out from a man who lived there

Q. Get down to Judge Archbald's connection with it, Mr. Jones.—A. I did not know Mr. Berry personally, then—

Q. What had Mr. Berry to do with it?-A. I was informed by this man who lived there that Mr. Berry was the agent for Lacoe & Shiffer.

Q. For the owner?—A. For the owner.

Q. Now, get to Judge Archbald's connection with it.—A. Then I happened into Judge Archbald's office, and I asked Judge Archbald whether he knew John W. Berry, of Pittston. I do not remember whether the judge said yes or no; but, in any event, the judge got in touch with Mr. Berry and I also got Mr. Berry on the new phone myself.

Q. Go on and tell what connection you had with that gravityfill transaction, so far as Judge Archbald was concerned with it.—A. Outside of securing that first right to sell, I proceeded-

Q. Now, you say "outside of getting that first right to sell." You have said, I think, that Judge Archbald got in communication with Mr. Berry about it?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he get the right to sell or not?-A. I understood he did.

Q. You proceeded on that theory afterwards, did you?—A. On the ground that the judge said I could go ahead and sell it,

I proceeded to find a buyer. The buyer, Fred Jones, had fallen down; he did not want it.

Q. Who was he?-A. A man named Charlie Stone.

Q. Jones failed to sell to Stone. Then what happened?—A. That ended it at that time. I think, then, that I wrote to Mr. Berry, through his old coal inspector, named Billy Wynn. happened to speak to Billy Wynn about it, and he said that he had been speaking

Q. No matter about that. You then wrote this last letter to Judge Peale, which you have identified and which does refer to the old gravity fill transaction?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Peale go on with that transaction, or did he say he did not want it?-A. No, sir; it was too small.

Q. I want to get down to the real question. We have information of two who did not buy. What happened then?—A. Then, after several months, I took the matter up with the Central Pennsylvania Brewing Co. and Mr. Robinson. Q. We have heard all about that. That afterwards led up to Mr. Warnke, did it not? Now, come down to the Warnke transaction. That is what we want to know about really.—A. Well, Mr. Warnke and I went and examined the property; we went over it thoroughly, and I informed him that, so far as fixing a price was concerned, I would put him in touch directly with the owners, with the understanding that he was to pay-it made no difference to us how low he could get it or what he would pay for it, but that he would have to pay $500 commission.

Q. Well, go on, then, and tell about what followed. You have told you made this bargain with Warnke. What was done?-A. I should like to correct right here a statement I made before the Judiciary Committee.

Q. You need not correct anything here that you said anywhere else unless you are asked to do so. I do not care anything about that now. Tell what is your personal recollection about it.—A. Well, I worked on it, I think, probably for two months. Finally it came to a point where they were ready to close the deal.

Q. Who was ready to close?-A. Warnke; and in the final settlement they made a note-

Q. Now, one moment. Who made a note? Did Warnke buy it?-A. So far as I knew, I was dealing with Warnke alone, who was going to organize a company that was not organized at that time, and finally they made a note which was handed over to Judge Archbald, out of which I received $250.

Q. Before you go on about that, do you know whether or not the Premier Coal Co. was the name of that company which Warnke and his associates organized?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what you are referring to?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did the Premier Coal Co. buy the gravity fill from the Lacoe & Shiffer Co. through Mr. Berry ?- A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then where did the $500 come from?-A. For commission.

Q. From whom?-A. From the purchasers,

Q. From the Premier Coal Co.?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Do you recollect who received that, whether Judge Archbald received it or you?-A. That is what I want to correct.

- Q. Never mind about correcting anything, Mr. Jones. Tell us your present recollection upon the subject .- A. Judge Archbald received the note,

Q. Did you get anything out of it?—A. I got $250.
Q. And he retained the other $250?—A. He did.
Q. And that was your commission for effecting this sale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you know, as a matter of fact, whether or not Judge Archbald had a written option from Mr. Berry as representative of the Lacoe & Shiffer Co., authorizing him to make this sale?—A. Well, I would not like to say.

Q. Very well; we will get that from some one else, perhaps. I will not press you if you do not know about it. In reference to the division of that $500, was there anything that entered into the transaction except the services that you and he had rendered in making this sale of the gravity fill from the Lacoe & Shiffer Co. to the Premier Coal Co.?—A. Nothing whatsoever.

Q. Were those companies railroad companies or companies composed of private individuals?-A. Private individuals.

Q. Both of them?—A. On each side.
Q. Do you remember going to Judge Archbald's office with Fred Jones in connection with this transaction?—A. I do.

Q. I do not care to go into details of it, but I want to know what, if anything, was said there about any railroad company or any rights any railroad had in connection with this gravityfill dump transaction?-A. Nothing whatever there.

Q. Was there anything said on that subject at any time in Judge Archbald's presence, as far as you know?-A. No, sir.

Q. Or by Judge Archbald?-A. No, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. You may cross-examine, gentlemen. Cross-examination:

(By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Where were you born?-A. In Wales.

Q. Are you a man of property and were you a man of property two years ago?-A. Just the same as I am now.

Two years ago you were not worth anything, were you?-A. Well, I was in one sense, and you may think, like a good many others, that I was not.

Q. I think I can bring you down to the point, Mr. Jones .- A. All right.

Q. Four years ago you had a little stock in a lumber company, did you not?—A. Yes. Q. A thousand dollars' worth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you never got anything out of it—the lumber company was closed out?-A. Well, I have since. I will get something.

Q. How much?—A. Well, I will have now coming of the amount that I spoke of as a loss something like $1,200.

Q. You will have it, but you did not have it then, and you thought three years ago you had lost it all .- A. Well, I had the right to expect it and count upon it.

Q. You swore before the Judiciary Committee that your stock had turned out to be worth nothing and that you had a home up there in Scranton, but your wife owned it, and nothing could be made out of you by execution under the laws of Pennsyl-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I respectfully suggest that this witness was not asked anything on direct examination that justifies this cross-examination.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I submit that is exactly what counsel did ask him.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I asked him his connection with a single company, and he has told us about that. I did not examine him about his financial responsibility.

Mr. Manager WEBB. You examined Mr. Davies fully about how many different corporations he was connected with and what his financial standing was supposed to be, and I want to show the contrary on cross-examination.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not understand that one witness can be cross-examined about the direct examination of another That is a new idea to me. witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The managers will have a full right to examine him on their own behalf.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) As a matter of fact, when the note signed by Judge Archbald, yourself, and Mr. Williams was executed and presented for discount, you were execution proof, were you not, and owed more money than you could pay?-A. I will answer "Yes" conditionally; but there are thousands who have been worse off a good deal.

Q. Is it not true, Mr. Jones, that you knew that you were insolvent when this note was signed, and that to your bank, the bank you had been dealing with, you owed something like $1,200 or $1,500, and therefore your bank would not discount the note?-A. That is not true.

Q. Well, what is true about it?-A. The bank would not discount the note for the simple reason that I had two notes which came to the bank as reverses, and I had exceeded the limit of my discount. That is the reason.

Q. Exactly. You owed them more money than you could pay them?-A. Exactly; but it was an asset nevertheless. It had gone bad, but was still outstanding.

Q. But still at that time you owed your bank more money than you could pay, and that is the reason they would not discount the $500 note.-A. No; that was not the condition at all.

Q. Then why did you not get it discounted at your bank?-A. For the simple reason that just previous to that two notes I had had discounted for a customer, which had become due, turned out to be bad, and consequently it was up to me to straighten that out without going further. It did no prove—

Q. But you did not have the money to do it?-A. I guess I had pretty near.

Q. Why did you not do it and have the note discounted?-A. Because I went and got it somewhere else. It was good at another bank.

Q. But you presented it to your bank for discount?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did not you get it discounted?-A. For the reason I have already told you.

Q. That is, for the reason that you did not have the money to pay what you already owed them and they would not let you get any deeper in debt to them?—A. Would that be anything new in business?

Q. Well, is not that true?-A No; not from that standpoint, the way you take it.

Q. Were you solvent at that time?-A. I consider that I was.

Q. Did you have any property, real estate, at that time?-A. Just the same as now.

Q. That is, your wife owned it? In Pennsylvania they can not collect your debts from your wife's property, can they?-A. But I can show my solvency in the same way.

Q. That is, if your wife is solvent you are solvent?-A. Well, if I have the right to use it I am solvent.

Q. If you have the right to give a mortgage on your wife's property, you are solvent to the extent of that property?—A. Or if I can get her to sign with me.

Q. Is there a mortgage on your wife's property?-A. Yes, sir: certainly.

Q. And you still say you were solvent four years ago when you presented that note for discount?—A. If I put the assets against the liabilities, I was solvent then and I am solvent now.

Q. You are solvent now?-A. Yes, sir; on the same grounds. Q. Your assets are purely speculative, you say, and may realize on them some time, because you may recover something ou the option in Venezuela?—A. Not necessarily, but I will recover out of the losses, which will offset the liabilities.

Q. You say you found Davies on the street, who finally directed you to go to Von Storch and get your note cashed?-A. I asked Mr. Davies the question; I told him, because we were familiar, that I had a note for discount, and I believe I told him that I had presented it at the West Side Bank, and gave the reasons, and he suggested that I go to Von Storch—

Mr. WORTHINGTON. One moment. Since my friends the managers have been so critical about matters not brought out on the direct examination, I will say that I do not remember that I went into this on direct examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the manager can interrogate the witness on his own behalf and examine him fully, but not on this point on cross-examination.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to examining him any further on it on cross-examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will repeat the rul-The managers can reintroduce the witness. petent testimony, but it must be brought out in a different way. It must be brought out by them by an examination in chief and not on cross-examination.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. I submit it is not the managers' time for putting in their testimony, and I object to their proceeding further along this line now.

Mr. Manager WEBB. My recollection is that three or four or five days ago the question was asked him as to who directed him to the bank of Von Storch, and he replied that Davies did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the present cross-examination relates to any matter which was gone into on the previous examination of the witness in chief it would be in order, otherwise it would not be.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I am quite sure the Chair will find that when he was put on the witness stand by the respondent the question was asked, who directed him to the bank of Von Storch, and he replied, "Davies."

Mr. SIMPSON. He was your witness before.

Mr. Manager WEBB. It came out on cross-examination. Mr. SIMPSON. No.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No. You will find on page 692 that it was gone into on direct examination by the managers.

Mr. Manager WEBB. He has stated prior to this time, Mr. President, that a man by the name of Davies directed him to the Von Storch Bank, and they have examined Mr. Davies with particularity.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We did not examine him about that transaction. We did not ask him anything about this $500 note transaction.

Mr. Manager WEBB. You asked him, Mr. Davies, about it? Mr. WORTHINGTON. Oh, no. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has enforced the rule when the managers objected to counsel for respondent cross-examining witnesses on matters not brought out on direct examination, and it must apply it to the other side.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Very well, sir.
Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Now, we want to know something about the Oxford coal dump. Who owned it?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to that unless this witness is shown to have examined the title. I have asked with whom he had dealings, but nothing about the title, as to which, of course, this witness could not know.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) You know that the railroad companies did not own the Oxford dump, do you not?-A. That the railroad did not own the dump?

Q. You know that no railroad owned it?-A. I do not think

Q. Or ever did?—A. I do not think so, but I do not know. I am not an authority on the subject.
Q. Did you ever hear that a railroad company owned the Oxford dump?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you have been around Scranton for how many years?-A. I have been around there for 18 or 19 years.

Q. You say Thomas Star Jones is the first man who ever suggested this packer No. 3 dump to you?—A. Thomas Star Jones never suggested anything to me. I said that I directed Thomas Star Jones in reference to the Oxford dump. was my answer.

Q. As a result of your direction to Thomas Starr Jones about the Oxford dump, did Judge Archbald secure an option or purchase the Oxford dump?—A. I had taken up the matter with Judge Archbald with reference to the rights of sale prior to

Q. Did Judge Archbald ever secure an option on the Oxford dump?-A. That I do not know.

Q. Did he ever tell you he did?-A. My impression is that the judge said that he had the rights to sell.

Q. Did he ever tell you he had secured an option on the Oxford dump?-A. I think the judge told me that he had the rights to sell.

Q. Did he ever tell you that he bad an option on it?—A. That I can not recollect—outside of the rights to sell, which is equivalent; one is as good as the other.

Q. Do you know from whom he got the option or the right to sell, as you call it?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you have anything to do with Packer No. 3 dump?-No, sir.

Q. You know nothing about that?—A. No, sir.
Q. You spoke of Berry gravity fill. Let me ask you if this is not the way you came to learn about the gravity fill, and if these are not the facts about it: Fred W. Jones was the first man who ever mentioned to you the Berry gravity fill, owned by the Lacoe & Shiffer Co.?-A. No.

Q. I thought you stated a while ago that Fred Jones was the first man to mention it.—A. No; my statement was that Fred W. Jones told me—he did not use the word "fill"; he used the word "dump"—and when he took me over to it, I had known that fill before I knew Fred Jones.

Q. What time in the year did he take you over to it?believe it would be somewhere around March-February, March, or April; somewhere around there. It was in the spring of the year.

Q. Can you not come nearer than within three months of the time?-A. Sir?

Q. Can you not come nearer than within three months of the time; was it in April, March, or February?—A. I believe it would be—we were working at the courthouse in February and March-in April, to the best of my recollection.

Q. What time in April?-A. I would not confine myself to dates.

Q. The first part or the last part, or the middle?-A. It may be the first part.

Q. It may be the first part?—A. Yes.

Q. You think now it was the first part, do you not?-A. Well, I believe that would be somewhere near the mark.

Q. All right. Now, then, immediately after Fred Jones spoke you about this gravity fill, you communicated with Judge Archbald?-A. I did.

Q. And Judge Archbald immediately picked up the phone and communicated with Mr. Berry, the agent for Lacoe & Shiffer. Is not that so?—A. I do not remember how it was done.

Q. Well, you saw Judge Archbald often, did you not?-A. I

Q. I ask you if that was not done—if Judge Archbald did not tell you that he had phoned Mr. Berry immediately after you communicated to him that you had found the fill?-A. I do not remember how it was done, because, in the first place, the judge could not telephone from the office there, because he would have to do it on the new phone, and he did not have the new phone in his office.

Q. My recollection is that the judge admits in his answer that he did phone him.-A. Then, the judge is right. I am not supposed to know that.

Q. You did not hear him phone Mr. Berry?—A. No, sir. Q. Anyway, after you and the judge had taken up the sale of the fill that Fred Jones had told you about, you finally sold it to Warnke?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you sold it to Warnke there was a $500 commission coming?-A. There was.

Q. A commission-was that your money or the judge's ?- A. Well, it was half and half.

Q. Half yours and half the judge's?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Warnke know that you were to get half of it?-A. Warnke knew when I negotiated the deal that he was to pay $500 commission.

Q. Did Warnke know that you were to get half of $500 commission?—A. He was supposed to know.

Q. Did he know?—A. Well, I do not—whether he recognized the fact or not is immaterial. He was supposed to know, because I was negotiating the deal with Fred Warnke.

Q. Upon whose authority were you negotiating the deal?—A. I was negotiating the deal on my own as well as Judge Arch-bald's.

Q. Had you ever taken it up with Mr. Berry, the agent for Lacoe & Shiffer?—A. I myself talked with Mr. Berry on the phone.

Q. And did he tell you that Judge Archbald had an option on it?-A. I can not remember.

Q. What did Mr. Berry tell you?-A. I understood from Mr. Berry that I had the right to go ahead and sell.

Q. Then you understood you had an option from Mr. Berry?—A. No, sir; I did not say that.

- Q. If you had a right to sell that is a verbal option, is it not?-A. I had the rights to sell on the information given me by Judge Archbald.
- Q. Then you would not have had any right to sell except that Judge Archbald gave you the right to sell?-A. In a sense: no.
- Q. Then you were the agent of Judge Archbald, is that it?-A. No. It would look a great deal better if you would put it that I was interested with him in that particular deal.

Q. Were you a partner with the judge, then?-A. That would look better.

Q. You were a partner with him?-A. On that particular deal: ves.

- Q. And you got $250?—A. Yes, sir. Q. And the judge got $250 out of the deal?—A. Yes, sir; that is correct.
- Q. And that $250 was yours, and you kept it?-A. I did. Q. What did Judge Archbald do to entitle him to $250?-He secured the rights to sell, which is the first essential point.

Q. He secured it from Mr. Berry?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how he secured the right?-A. I have said already that I do not know.

Q. You do not know. When was this deal consummated with Mr. Warnke?-A. I think it was some time in 1912. I am not I would not be positive on that.

Q. Two hundred and fifty dollars is a good big amount for you to make at one time, is it not? Do you not remember when you got the money?-A. Oh, I have handled more than

Q. I know; but that was a pretty fair amount. Do you remember when you got the $250?—A. I got it in 1912.

Q. This year?-A. Yes.

- Q. Was it January, February, or March?—A. I think it would be somewhere around March, or somewhere around that way, or April, may be; I would not be sure. The note is the best evidence on that time.
- Q. Do you know what Mr. Warnke was to pay for this fill?-A. That was a matter to be decided between Mr. Berry and himself.

Q. Berry and whom?—A. Warnke and his partners.

- Q. Did not Judge Archbald have anything to do with the price?-A. It was a case of make the best bargain you can, That is what I understood.
- Q. In all these dealings you did not know the price that Warnke paid to Judge Archbald and Berry for the fill?—A. I did.
- Q. You did?-A. Yes; I did; on the information of Fred Warnke himself.
- Q. I will ask you if you did swear before the Judiciary Committee that you did not know what the price was?-A. As far as I personally am concerned I would not, because the negotiation would be on one side of the purchaser from the seller. I would have to learn it from the purchaser, which I did.

Q. After all that circumlocution let me ask you if you swore this before the Judiciary Committee last May; Mr. WORTHINGTON. What page? Mr. Manager WEBB, Page 641.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. How much was paid for this filling?
Mr. JONES. Now, I couldn't really say, because the price was left between the purchaser and the owner. There was no option, so far as price was concerned, to me or price to them; let them make the best bargain they could.

The WITNESS. That is what I have answered to-day.

Q. And that is so?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you did not know at the time this contract was completed what the fill was being sold for or how much Warnke was paying for it?-A. I said that I had learned that from them; that I had no personal knowledge. I had to learn it from the other side-from the purchaser.

Q. Did you get this $500 note cashed that was signed by Warnke's coal company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who got it cashed?—A. Judge Archbald.
Q. Judge Archbald?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you give him the money or did he give you the money?-A. The judge gave me the money.

Q. You have got that mixed, too, have you not?—A. No. That is what I want to explain. I was mixed on that before the Judiciary Committee.

Q. Yes. Before the Judiciary Committee you swore you got the note cashed and turned over $250 to the judge as a present .-- A. That is where, as I said before, I got confused-

Q. Let me see if this is what you said—
Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit that the witness ought to be allowed to finish his answer, and I ask that the stenographer read the answer as far as the witness has gone.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I thought he had finished.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may finish his

Mr. Manager WEBB. Go ahead and explain what you want to explain.

The Witness (continuing). I got confused as to how that note passed; I had it in my mind all the time that I admitted that the judge got the note and that I received my share of it. but when I received the congressional report I found out that I had made a mistake on that point, and that is why I asked to correct that to-day.

Q. Then, what you did swear to before the Judiciary Committee was that the $500 was just for selling the fill?—A. Yes,

Q. And that you made the judge a present of $250?-A. That was forced in by the Judiciary Committee.

Q. Now, let us see how much force there was. Let us see if you did not swear this, on page 614:

Mr. Floyd. Do you mean to say, Mr. Jones, that you proposed to Judge Archbald that you were going to make this deal and going to give half of your profits or commission to him without any consideration or services on his part?

Mr. Jones, that you proposed to Judge half of your profits or commission to him without any consideration or services on his part?

Mr. Jones, that you proposed to Judge half of your profits of your profits of your profits of him without any consideration or services on his part?

The accommodation, I may add there, was his signing of the $500 note for you which you finally had discounted by Von Storch.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to the manager stating what the witness said. He did not say that.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Read the following questions and answers, and it will show that he did say that.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have no objection to reading the questions and answers, but I object to the manager stating what he said.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I will read it.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I will read it.

Mr. Floyd. What did he tell you when you told him you were going to give him the $250 in return for the accommodation he had rendered you in signing that note for you?

Mr. Jones. He said he was not doing it for that purpose.

Mr. Floyd. But when you bad made the deal and received your commission of $500 you personally turned over $250 to him?

Mr. Jones. Yes, sir.

Mr. Floyd. And he accepted it?

Mr. Jones. Yes, sir.

Mr. Floyd. Did he protest against taking it?

Mr. Jones. No; because I simply said that that was what I proposed to do. It was unsolicited on his part.

Mr. Floyd. Did he take it with the understanding that it was to be applied on your note or as a gift?

Mr. Jones. No, sir.

Mr. Floyd. Just as a gift?

Mr. Jones. Yes, sir.

The Witness. That is why I said it was the Judiciary Com-

The WITNESS. That is why I said it was the Judiciary Committee that put in the word "gift," and I simply, to get rid of it. said "Yes, sir."

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I ask you if you did not swear before that committee on more than three of four occasions that this $250 you gave to Judge Archbald at the time of the Warnke deal was a mere gift to him for his having signed for you the $500 note for your speculation in Venezuela?—A. There are two ways of answering that question, and this explains it.

Q. That would be a conclusion. Did you not swear that in effect before the Judiciary Committee?-A. Just as it says.

That is the answer. Q. Now, you want to change it?-A. I can explain it without changing it.

Q. Go ahead and explain it .- A. I took this view: That when the matter was terminated and, as I testified there, that Judge Archbald had lost all confidence in that fill and he did not think it could be sold, I took the view that when I took it up months later with Fred Warnke it was an entirely different proposition. There was no option right at that time.

Q. There was no what?—A. There was no option on it at that time, at the time I sold it. That had lapsed.

Q. Mr. Berry's option had expired?—A. Yes. Consequently, I was working on my own hook, in a sense, and I could look at it from two standpoints and be consistent with that answer.

Q. Then you gave the $250, as I understand you now, partly as a reward for his having signed your $500 note and partly for his services in the sale of the Warnke fill. Is that right?—A. No. Looking at it from the other angle, of his agreement with me and mine with him, when he secured the right to sell, it was no gift, it was no present; it was his just rights.

Q. But you have just stated that his option from Berry had expired and he had no right to it at all?-A. That does not change the condition so far as the result of the sale is con-

Q. Can you now give any reason for paying the $250 to Judge Archbald?—A. Because he was entitled to it for services rendered in securing the rights to sell.

Q. Then it was not a gift to him, as you swore before the Judiciary Committee?—A. As the Judiciary Committee formed it, I said "yes," to get rid of the answer.

Q. Do you mean to say that because of the way the question was formed you swore falsely?—A. I can show the answers in was formed you swore inisely?—A. I can show the answer to that was—the Congressional, Record where my first answer to that was—why I gave the judge $250; I said that was his share. You will find my answer to that. Why did they not accept it instead of pushing the issue down to the present point of business?

Q. I have just read you what you swore-on page 644-where you said it was a gift to Judge Archbald in consideration of his kindness in signing the note.—A. I would not be ashamed to own that that is correct.

Q. Was your answer there correct?-A. From one angle it may be and from the other angle it may not be.

Q. Then, after all, the Judiciary Committee did not make you swear falsely?-A. I recognized that all that was needed at the time was something that was incriminating, and the other might not be so acceptable.

Q. That is the answer you make to that question, is it?-Yes, sir.

Q. That the Judiciary Committee was looking for something incriminating, and you thought you would give it to them? A. I thought I would not volunteer it.

Q. Let me ask you if you did not say this, on page 647:

Mr. RUCKER. Then in March, 1912, when you made this deal by which you made a profit of $500, a commission of $500, you tell the committee that a man in your financial condition went to Judge Archbald and voluntarily made him a donation of $250?

Mr. JONES. Yes. sir.
Mr. RUCKER. Without consideration, except that he had signed the note for you?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; positively.

The WITNESS. There is nothing inconsistent in that with the answer I have made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the witness has gone over this ground a half a dozen times.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I think he has said as much as I can get from him.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) When Jones told you where this fill was you agreed to give him quite a commission on the sale of it?-A. Yes; if he could fulfill his part of the contract.

Q. I ask you if you did not propose to give him a commission on this property?—A. Yes, sir.

a this property?—A. Yes, sir. Q. If it was sold for over $12,000, for having rendered service to you in the past?—A. Yes, sir.

 Q. For pointing out the fill?—A. The contract read that way.
 Q. You went to Judge Archbald and drew it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you go to Judge Archbald's office and tell him what your contract with Fred Jones was?—A. I told Judge Archbald-and Jones was with me-that I had been with Fred Jones and we had seen the fill, and that I proposed to compensate Fred Jones on the understanding that he delivered his customer, which he failed to do. He never had him to deliver.

which he falled to do. He never had min to deriver.

Q. I will ask you if you and Fred W. Jones did not sign this agreement, witnessed by R. M. Speich, which was made in the presence of Judge Archbald?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you not tell Judge Archbald you were going to give him this contract?—A. The chances are that I did so.

Q. Never mind about the chances. Did you not tell Fred W. Jones, in Judge Archbald's presence, that you were going to give him this contract?—A. I am not clear on that.

Q. And he said "We will go down to Mr. Davis's office and get it drawn up?-A. Positively no.

Was anything of that kind said in the judge's presence?-

There was not. Q. Did the judge know you had given Jones this contract?-A. It had not been given at the time I am referring to.

Q. Did the judge know you had given the contract to Jones?-A. No.

Q. Did you discuss it in the judge's presence?-A. We discussed it from the standpoint I indicated, to give something to

Q. Did you tell him that?-A. I do not think I did. I may have, but I would not be sure of that.

Q. Did you ever give Fred anything?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not want to have the time taken up in discussing the division of commissions between this Jones and Fred Jones. It strikes me that it is too much Jones

Mr. Manager WEBB. There are three Joneses, and I want to get them distinct. I want to show that this witness signed an agreement with Fred W. Jones, and the judge knew about it, to give him 6 per cent of the sale over $12,000 and 5 per cent below $12,000. Did you sign that kind of a contract?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object. We are not called upon to go into the question about the division of a commission between Fred Jones and this witness or anybody else. The question is whether, when Judge Archbald received $250, he received it on account of something he had done or was supposed to have done in connection with the purchase of the gravity fill, or whether, as charged in the article with which we are dealing now, he received it as a reward for having gone in behalf of this witness to a railroad official some months before and asked him to give the man a hearing.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Let me ask you, Did you sign this contract there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Wait a moment. The counsel has objected.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I did not know that he objected to my asking him if he signed this contract.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I did object. It is a contract between Fred Jones and this witness in relation to Fred Jones's commission. We are now dealing, I understand, with the question whether this witness treated Fred Jones properly about Fred Jones's connection with this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel is not objecting to the contract

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am objecting to the contract, and talking about the relation between this witness and Fred The only question properly to ask the witness about this transaction is whether he was at the office of Judge Archbald, and if anyhing was said there about the right of any railroad in reference to the approaches to this gravity fill. That was all. I purposely avoided going into this transaction in which Fred Jones was a party. It is a side issue to a side issue.

Mr. Manager WEBB. But he said that Fred Jones was the first man who mentioned this matter to him. Now, I am entitled to bring out the whole conversation and the agreement with Fred W. Jones. Mr. President, you will remember it is our contention, in one aspect of this case, that this $500 which we are discussing now was paid by this man Warnke to Judge Archbald for his influence with the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad—with its vice president, one Richards. The President will at least see that there is something peculiar or shadowy about this $500 note, from the fact that this contract was given to Fred W. Jones by John Henry Jones, and that no money has ever been paid from the sale of this contract is some evidence at least that it was not a commission; that it was a pure gift to Judge Archbald for some other purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel will remember that the Chair requested the manager to make his examination as concise as possible.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I will do that. This witness has been examined upon four different propositions, and it is tedious I know. [To the witness:] Now, Mr. Jones, did you sign this agreement with Fred W. Jones, dated April 25, 1911?

The Witness. I did. Mr. Manager WEBB. Read it, Mr. Secretary, please, Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to reading it. The original document the witness should see before he is asked whether he signed it or not.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I think the counsel admitted that all documents published in the record were correct and could be read from the book. I did not know he was making that captious objection.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am very much obliged for the suggestion of making a captious objection. I supposed it was a very proper remark, when the witness was asked as to whether he signed the document and the original document is here that it should be shown to him. Mr. SIMPSON. It is Exhibit 88.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 88.]

Whereas Fred W. Jones, of Scranton, Pa., has on divers occasions rendered valuable services to me in the matter of locating and securing a culm dump, located in the borough of Moosic, Pa., between Plains No. 4 and 5; and Whereas in consideration of said services it was agreed that upon the sale and disposal of said dump said Fred W. Jones was to be compensated:

and disposal of said dump said Fred W. Jones was to be compensated:

Now, therefore, I hereby agree in the event of said dump being sold by me for a sum in excess of twelve thousand dollars ($12,000) to pay said Fred W. Jones 6 per cent (6%) of the amount of the price, and in the event of said dump being sold for the sum of twelve thousand dollars ($12,000), or any portion thereof, I agree to pay to said Fred W. Jones 5 per cent (5%) of the price or sum so received.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 25th day of April, A. D. 1911.

J. HENRY JONES. FRED W. JONES.

Witness: R. M. SPEICH.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Jones, when you and Fred W. Jones met at the judge's office did you tell him and Fred Jones that if there was any difficulty about getting a right of way over the railroad property to haul away the coal from the fill that Judge Archbald had agreed to attend to that with the D. & H. Railroad?-A. Never.

Q. Did you tell him outside the judge's presence?-A. No, sir.

Q. Was the D. & H. Railroad ever concerned or discussed in connection with the gravity fill?—A. Will you allow me to explain how that occurred?

O. If it is not too long, I have no objection .- A. After we left Judge Archbald's office there was no mention of right of way there, but Charlie Stone and I and Fred Jones went down to a placed called the Backus, and while in there Stone mentioned that he was doubtful as to whether he would be permitted to get across the land.

Q. The land of whom?—A. To get out to the main road.

Q. From the D. & H. railroad property?—A. I think he said it would be necessary to get the right of way from the D. & H. I said, "First of all, Mr. Stone, make up your mind to buy the property or refuse, and then talk about getting out afterwards." That is all that was spoken.

Q. Did you tell him the judge had told you that he would take care of that?-A. No, sir; never.

Q. The judge had discovered the D. & H. right of way with you, had he not?—A. No, sir. Q. He had not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was this Berry fill one of the old gravity-railroad fills?-

A. It is an old gravity-railroad fill.

Q. I understand. I want to bring it out clearly—you seem to know—that that fill was abandoned along with other fills by the gravity railroad some 30 or 40 years ago?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And now the landowners claim to own the fills on which the coal is deposited?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Lacoe & Shiffer owned this particular fill?—A. They owned the land all around there as well as the fill.

Q. Is this near the Schmit fill? Do you know where the Schmit fill and the Petersen fills are?—A. No; it can not be

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all, Mr. President.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Just one question. I want to ask you, Mr. Jones, whether before the Judiciary Committee on this subject you further testified, as I find on page 660, as

Mr. RUCKER. How did you pay Judge Archbald? Did you pay him cash or give him a check?
Mr. JONES. The judge got the note. I gave the note to the judge to deposit.

Mr. RUCKER. You sold him the note, then?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. They gave you a note for $500?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. RUCKER. And you delivered that to Judge Archbald, and he gave you $250 and kept the note?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. RUCKER. And has the note; or, at least, did have it?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. RUCKER. That is the way it was paid?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Did that happen? Is that the way you testified before the Judiciary Committee?—A. Yes; because the—Q. I do not ask you to qualify or explain it now. I also ask you whether you did not further testify in the very last words of your examination before the Judiciary Committee—Mr. Managar WEBB. On what page?

Mr. Manager WEBB. On what page?

ginning at the bottom of page 664:

Mr. Worthington. In reference to the $500 note, of which Judge Archbald got $250, you gave him that note, and you said he paid you $250 for it?

Mr. Jones. Yes, sir.

Mr. Worthington. As a matter of fact, did he not take it and get it discounted?

Mr. Jones. He took the note and got it discounted.

Mr. Worthington. And turned over the proceeds to you, and you gave him $250; or did he retain it out of the discount?

Mr. Jones. He retained his $250, and gave me mine out of it.

Mr. Worthington. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nye. You say he retained his $250; what do you mean?

Mr. Jones. $250 that I had agreed he was to have.

Mr. McCoy. What do you mean when you say you had agreed he should have that?

Mr. Jones. That, I told him, was going to be his; I was going to give him that.

Mr. McCoy. On the deal; on the sale of the dump, of the fill.

Those were the last words of your examination before the

Those were the last words of your examination before the Judiciary Committee?

The WITNESS.

The WITNESS. Yes. Mr. WORTHINGTON.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire. He is finally excused.

TESTIMONY OF ROBERT N. PATTERSON.

Robert N. Patterson appeared, and, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Patterson, where do you live?-A. At the Hamilton Hotel.

Q. The Hamilton Hotel in this city?-A. Yes, sir.

Are you employed there?—A. Yes, sir. In what way, please?—A. I am head clerk there. How long have you been head clerk?-A. Four years.

Q. Have you at our request looked at your records to see whether Judge Archbald was there last April?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you brought with you your record to show what the fact is in that regard?—A. Yes sir [producing paper].

Q. And what is it?-A. He was with us from the evening of the 8th of April until after breakfast on the morning of the 12th.

Q. Was he alone when he was at the Hamilton House on that occasion?—A. He was; yes, sir. Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Mr. Manager WEBB. May we see your record, Mr. Patterson?

(The paper was handed to the manager.)
Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I wish you would just read the record you have there. Read the record on your register book.—A. I have him registered here from the evening of the 8th-

Q. Just read the figures you have.—A. Room 39, lodging, fourth month, eighth day, breakfast, until after breakfast, fourth month, twelfth day. Board, three and one-half days.

Q. Who was with him?—A. He was alone. That is, according to our record he was alone with us.

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. You have not stated the year.

1912. The WITNESS.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may be excused.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I be permitted to make an observation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rules the Senator authorized to submit any order he wishes to the Senate, but if he wishes to discuss anything the rules prescribe that it shall be done in another way.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was not to offer an order; but I think inquiry has been made of the counsel for the respondent whether or not they could get in their testimony to-day.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I should like to say it is utterly impossible to finish to-day, if we should sit until midnight, with our evidence. When we started in with our evidence Monday morning we had expected to be able to finish, but the cross-examinations have been so long that where we calculated on 20 witnesses a day we have examined only a dozen or less. I do not mean in the slightest degree to criticize or to find fault with the managers, but simply to show that we were in error in our calculation as to what would probably happen. I would myself say it would be a very great accommodation to us, and especially to me personally, if at this time we could stop the taking of testimony in this case and let it go over until the 3d of January. There are but a few of us here, and the labors we have been engaged on have been very trying, especially upon me. It would be a personal accommodation to me if we could stop now.

Of course, Mr. President, in a case which has lasted so long and where there have been so many witnesses and so many facts gone over, it is very important for us, in justice to our client, to go over what has been done and see what it is necessary for us to offer or whether we have covered all the points in the

For all these reasons we had intended to suggest in a few moments what has already been suggested to the Chair, that the proceedings in this case should stop at or about this time.

I should like to say further, Mr. President, while I am on my feet, I understand the two Houses have decided to adjourn to-day until the 2d of January. It is our purpose when the Senate meets, after presenting a little more testimony that we have, to place Judge Archbald himself upon the stand, and we would very much dislike to do that on the 2d of January when, as I think, we may take it for granted it will be very difficult to have a full attendance of the Senate just after the 1st of Janu-In the same connection I may state that Senators have said to us openly that they wish to be here when Judge Archbald is examined. For that reason I urge that as a further reason why when the court adjourns to-day it shall be until the 3d of January instead of the 2d.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, the managers are entirely agreeable to what I believe to be the wish of the Senate at this time. It is now nearly 4 o'clock, and I understand the session was to close this afternoon probably at 5, certainly not later than 6. In view of the statement made by the respondent's counsel that he can not conclude this afternoon, perhaps it would serve the convenience not only of the respondent's counsel but of the court itself that a recess of the court be had at this time.

Mr. President, there is one observation the respondent's counsel has made that perhaps I should make an observation in the nature of a reply to, and that is as to the length of time consumed by cross-examination. I think that if the record were examined since the respondent has been introducing his witnesses it would reveal the fact that a very little time of the Senate has been occupied in cross-examination. A considerable part of the time was used in the discussion of admissibility of testimony. That was not the fault of the managers. In about nine cases out of ten the objection of the managers, I think, was sustained by the Chair.

So, Mr. President, if it meets the wishes of the Senate that the court do now adjourn until the 3d of January, the managers have no objection to that at all, but will cheerfully acquiesce in that determination.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I offer the following order and ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming submits an order for the consideration and action of the Senate. The Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That when the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment adjourns to-day it be to meet at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. January 3, 1913.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the order? If not, it will be considered as having been unanimously so ordered by the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment adjourned until Friday, January 3, 1913, at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. The managers on the part of the House and the respondent and his counsel retired.

WORK OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS OF THE GOVERNMENT (S. DOC. NO. 989).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

This is the third of a series of messages in which I have brought to the attention of the Congress the important transactions of the Government in each of its departments during the last year and have discussed needed reforms.

HEADS OF DEPARTMENTS SHOULD HAVE SEATS ON THE FLOOR OF CONGRESS.

I recommend the adoption of legislation which shall make it the duty of heads of departments—the members of the President's Cabinet—at convenient times to attend the session of the House and the Senate, which shall provide seats for them in each House, and give them the opportunity to take part in all discussions and to answer questions of which they have had due notice. The rigid holding apart of the executive and the legislative branches of this Government has not worked for the great advantage of either. There has been much lost motion in the machinery, due to the lack of cooperation and interchange of views face to face between the representatives of the Executive and the Members of the two legislative branches of the Government. It was never intended that they should be separated in the sense of not being in constant effective touch and relationship to each other. The legislative and the executive each performs its own appropriate function, but these functions must be coordinated. Time and time again debates have arisen in each House upon issues which the information of a particular department head would have enabled him, if present, to end at once by a simple explanation or statement. Time and time again a forceful and earnest presentation of facts and arguments by the representative of the Executive whose duty it is to enforce the law would have brought about a useful reform by amendment, which in the absence of such a statement has failed of passage. I do not think I am mistaken in saying that the presence of the members of the Cabinet on the floor of each House would greatly contribute to the enactment of beneficial legislation. Nor would this in any degree deprive either the legislative or the executive of the independence which separation of the two branches has been intended to promote. It would only facilitate their cooperation in the public interest.

On the other hand, I am sure that the necessity and duty imposed upon department heads of appearing in each House and in answer to searching questions, of rendering upon their feet an account of what they have done, or what has been done by the administration, will spur each member of the Cabinet to closer attention to the details of his department, to greater familiarity with its needs, and to greater care to avoid the just criticism which the answers brought out in questions put and discussions arising between the Members of either House and the members of the Cabinet may properly evoke. Objection is made that the members of the administration having no vote could exercise no power on the floor of the House, and could not assume that attitude of authority and control which the English parliamentary Government have and which enables them to meet the responsibilities the English system thrusts upon them. I agree that in certain respects it would be more satisfactory if members of the Cabinet could at the same time be Members of both Houses, with voting power, but this is impossible under our system; and while a lack of this feature may detract from the influence of the department chiefs, it will not prevent the good results which I have described above both in the matter of legislation and in the matter of administration. The enactment of such a law would be quite within the power of Congress without constitutional amendment, and it has such possibilities of usefulness that we might well make the experiment, and if we are disappointed the misstep can be easily retraced by a repeal of the enabling legislation.

This is not a new proposition. In the House of Representatives, in the Thirty-eighth Congress, the proposition was referred to a select committee of seven Members. The committee made an extensive report and urged the adoption of the reform. The report showed that our history had not been without illustration of the necessity and the examples of the practice by pointing out that in early days Secretaries were repeatedly called to the presence of either House for consultation, advice, and information. It also referred to remarks of Mr. Justice Story in his Commentaries on the Constitution, in which he urgently presented the wisdom of such a change. This report is to be found in Volume I of the Reports of Committees of the First Session of the Thirty-eighth Congress, April 6, 1864.

Again, on February 4, 1881, a select committee of the Senate recommended the passage of a similar bill, and made a report, in which, while approving the separation of the three branches, the executive, legislative, and judicial, they point out as a reason for the proposed change that, although having a separate existence, the branches are "to cooperate, each with the other, as the different members of the human body must cooperate with each other in order to form the figure and perform the duties of a perfect man."

The report concluded as follows:

The report concluded as follows:

This system will require the selection of the strongest men to be heads of departments and will require them to be well equipped with the knowledge of their offices. It will also require the strongest men to be the leaders of Congress and participate in debate. It will bring these strong men in contact, perhaps into conflict, to advance the public weal, and thus stimulate their abilities and their efforts, and will thus assuredly result to the good of the country.

If it should appear by actual experience that the beads of departments in fact have not time to perform the additional duty imposed on them by this bill, the force in their offices should be increased or the duties devolving on them personally should be diminished. An under secretary should be appointed to whom could be confided that routine of administration which requires only order and accuracy. The principal officers could then confine their attention to those duties which require wise discretion and intellectual activity. Thus they would have abundance of time for their duties under this bill. Indeed, your committee believes that the public interest would be subserved if the Secretaries were relieved of the harassing cares of distributing clerkships and closely supervising the mere machinery of the departments. Your committee believes that the adoption of this bill and the effective execution of its provisions will be the first step toward a sound civil-service reform which will secure a larger wisdom in the adoption of policies and a better system in their execution.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANK SYSTEM.

The Postal Savings Bank System has been extended so that it now includes 4,004 fourth-class post offices, as well as 645 branch offices and stations in the larger cities. There are now 12,812 depositories at which patrons of the system may open accounts. The number of depositors is 300,000 and the amount of their deposits is approximately $28,000,000, not including $1,314,140 which has been withdrawn by depositors for the purpose of buying postal savings bonds. Experience demonstrates the value of dispensing with the pass book and introducing in its place a certificate of deposit. The gross income of the postal savings system for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, will amount to $700,000 and the interest payable to depositors to $300,000. The cost of supplies, equipment, and salaries is $700,000. It thus appears that the system lacks $300,000 a year of paying interest and expenses. It is estimated, however, that when the deposits have reached the sum of $50,000,000, which at the present rate they soon will do, the system will be self-sus-By law the postal savings funds deposited at each post office are required to be redeposited in local banks. State and national banks to the number of 7,357 have qualified as depositories for these funds. Such deposits are secured by bonds aggregating $54,000,000. Of this amount, $37,000,000 represent municipal bonds.

PARCEL POST.

In several messages I have favored and recommended the adoption of a system of parcel post. In the postal appropriation act of last year a general system was provided and its installation was directed by the 1st of January. This has entailed upon the Post Office Department a great deal of very heavy labor, but the Postmaster General informs me that on the date selected, to wit, the 1st of January, near at hand, the department will be in readiness to meet successfully the requirements of the public.

CLASSIFICATION OF POSTMASTERS.

A trial, during the past three years, of the system of classifying fourth-class postmasters in that part of the country lying between the Mississippi River on the west, Canada on the north, the Atlantic Ocean on the east, and Mason and Dixon's line on the south has been sufficiently satisfactory to justify the postal authorities in recommending the extension of the order to include all the fourth-class postmasters in the country. In September, 1912, upon the suggestion of the Postmaster General, I directed him to prepare an order which should put the system in effect, except in Alaska, Guam, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and Samoa. Under date of October 15 I issued such an order which affected 36,000 postmasters. By the order the post offices were divided into groups A and B. Group A includes all postmasters whose compensation is $500 or more, and group B those whose compensation is less than that sum. Different methods are pursued in the selection of the postmasters for group A and group B. Criticism has been made of this order on the ground that the motive for it was political. Nothing could be further from the truth. The order was made before the election and in the interest of efficient public service. I have several times requested Congress to give me authority to put first, second, and third class postmasters, and all other local officers, including internal-revenue officers, customs offi-cers, United States marshals, and the local agents of the other departments, under the classification of the civil-service law by taking away the necessity for confirming such appointments by the Senate. I deeply regret the failure of Congress to follow these recommendations. The change would have taken out of politics practically every local officer and would have entirely cured the evils growing out of what under the present law must always remain a remnant of the spoils system.

COMPENSATION TO BAILWAYS FOR CARRYING MAILS.

It is expected that the establishment of a parcel post on January 1 will largely increase the amount of mail matter to be transported by the railways, and Congress should be prompt to provide a way by which they may receive the additional compensation to which they will be entitled. The Postmaster General urges that the department's plan for a complete readjustment of the system of paying the railways for carrying the mails be adopted, substituting space for weight as the principal factor in fixing compensation. Under this plan it will be possible to determine without delay what additional payment should be made on account of the parcel post. The Postmaster General's recommendation is based on the results of a far-reaching investigation begun early in the administration with the object of determining what it costs the railways to carry the mails. The statistics obtained during the course of the inquiry show that while many of the railways, and particularly the larger systems, were making profits from mail transportation, certain of the lines were actually carrying the mails at a loss. As a result of the investigation the department, after giving the subject careful consideration, decided to urge the abandonment of the present plan of fixing compensation on the basis of the weight of the mails carried, a plan that has proved to be ex-ceedingly expensive and in other respects unsatisfactory. Under the method proposed the railway companies will annually sub-mit to the department reports showing what it costs them to carry the mails, and this cost will be apportioned on the basis of the car space engaged, payment to be allowed at the rate thus determined in amounts that will cover the cost and a reasonable profit. If a railway is not satisfied with the manner in which the department apportions the cost in fixing compensation, it is to have the right, under the new plan, of appealing to the Interstate Commerce Commission. This feature of the proposed law would seem to insure a fair treatment of the railways. It is hoped that Congress will give the matter immediate attention and that the method of compensation recommended by the department or some other suitable plan will be promptly authorized.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

The Interior Department, in the problems of administration included within its jurisdiction, presents more difficult questions than any other. This has been due perhaps to temporary causes of a political character, but more especially to the inherent difficulty in the performance of some of the functions which are assigned to it. Its chief duty is the guardianship of the public domain and the disposition of that domain to private ownership under homestead, mining, and other laws by which patents from the Government to the individual are authorized on certain conditions. During the last decade the public seemed to become suddenly aware that a very large part of its domain had passed from its control into private ownership, under laws not well adapted to modern conditions, and also that in the doing of this the provisions of existing law and regulations adopted in accordance with law had not been strictly observed, and that in the transfer of title much fraud had intervened, to the pecuniary benefit of dishonest persons. There arose there-upon a demand for conservation of the public domain, its protection against fraudulent diminution, and the preservation of that part of it from private acquisition which it seemed necessary to keep for future public use. The movement, excellent in the intention which prompted it, and useful in its results, has nevertheless had some bad effects, which the western country has recently been feeling and in respect of which there is danger of a reaction toward older abuses unless we can attain the golden mean, which consists in the prevention of the mere exploitation of the public domain for private purposes while at the same time facilitating its development for the benefit of the local public.

The land laws need complete revision to secure proper conservation, on the one hand, of land that ought to be kept in public use and, on the other hand, prompt disposition of those lands which ought to be disposed in private ownership or turned over to private use by properly guarded leases. In addition to this there are not enough officials in our Land Department with legal knowledge sufficient promptly to make the decisions which are called for. The whole land-laws system should be reorganized, and not until it is reorganized will decisions be made as promptly as they ought or will men who have earned title to public land under the statute receive their patents within a reasonably short period. The present administration has done what it could in this regard, but the necessity for reform and change by a revision of the laws and an increase and reorganization of the force remains, and I submit to Congress the wisdom of a full examination of this subject, in order that a very large and important part of our people in the West may be relieved from a just cause of imitation. may be relieved from a just cause of irritation.

I invite your attention to the discussion by the Secretary of the Interior of the need for legislation with respect to mining claims, leases of coal lands in this country and in Alaska, and for similar disposition of oil, phosphate, and potash lands, and also to his discussion of the proper use to be made of waterpower sites held by the Government. Many of these lands are now being withheld from use by the public under the general withdrawal act which was passed by the last Congress. That act was not for the purpose of disposing of the question, but it was for the purpose of preserving the lands until the question could be solved. I earnestly urge that the matter is of the highest importance to our western fellow citizens and ought to command the immediate attention of the legislative branch of the Government.

Another function which the Interior Department has to perform is that of the guardianship of Indians. In spite of everything which has been said in criticism of the policy of our Government toward the Indians, the amount of wealth which is now held by it for these wards per capita shows that the Government has been generous; but the management of so large an estate, with the great variety of circumstances that surround each tribe and each case, calls for the exercise of the highest business discretion, and the machinery provided in the Indian Bureau for the discharge of this function is entirely inadequate. The position of Indian commissioner demands the exercise of business ability of the first order, and it is difficult to secure such talent for the salary provided.

The condition of health of the Indian and the prevalence in the tribes of curable diseases has been recently exploited in the press. In a message to Congress at its last session I brought this subject to its attention and invited a special appropriation, in order that our facilities for overcoming diseases among the Indians might be properly increased, but no action was then taken by Congress on the subject, nor has such appropriation been made since.

The commission appointed by authority of the Congress to report on the proper method of securing railroad development in Alaska is formulating its report, and I expect to have an opportunity before the end of this session to submit its recommendations.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The far-reaching utility of the educational system carried on by the Department of Agriculture for the benefit of the farmers of our country calls for no elaboration. Each year there is a growth in the variety of facts which it brings out for the benefit of the farmer, and each year confirms the wisdom of the expenditure of the appropriations made for that department.

PURE-FOOD LAW.

The Department of Agriculture is charged with the execution of the pure-food law. The passage of this encountered much opposition from manufacturers and others who feared the effect upon their business of the enforcement of its provisions. The opposition aroused the just indignation of the public and led to an intense sympathy with the severe and rigid enforcement of the provisions of the new law. It had to deal in many instances with the question whether or not products of large business enterprises, in the form of food preparations, were deleterious to the public health; and while in a great majority of instances this issue was easily determinable, there were not a few cases in which it was had to draw the line between a useful and a harmful food preparation. In cases like this, when a decision involved the destruction of great business enterprises representing the investment of large capital and the expenditure of great energy and ability, the danger of serious injustice was very considerable in the enforcement of a new The public law under the spur of great public indignation. officials charged with executing the law might do injustice in heated controversy through unconscious pride of opinion and obstinacy of conclusion. For this reason President Roosevelt felt justified in creating a board of experts, known as the Remsen Board, to whom in cases of much importance an appeal might be taken and a review had of a decision of the Bureau of Chemistry in the Agricultural Department. I heartily agree that it was wise to create this board in order that injustice might not be done. The questions which arise are not generally those involving palpable injury to health, but they are upon the narrow and doubtful line in respect of which it is better to be in some error not dangerous than to be radically destructive. I think that the time has come for Congress to recognize the necessity for some such tribunal of appeal and to make specific statutory provision for it. While we are struggling to suppress an evil of great proportions like that of impure food, we must provide machinery in the law itself to prevent its becoming an instrument of oppression, and we ought to enable those whose business is threatened with annihilation to have some tribunal and some form of appeal in which they have a complete day in court.

AGRICULTURAL CREDITS.

I referred in my first message to the question of improving the system of agricultural credits. The Secretary of Agriculture has made an investigation into the matter of credits in this country, and I commend a consideration of the information which through his agents he has been able to collect. It does not in any way minimize the importance of the proposal, but it gives more accurate information upon some of the phases of the question than we have heretofore had.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

I commend to Congress an examination of the report of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and especially that part in which he discusses the office of the Bureau of Corporations, the value to commerce of a proposed trade commission, and the steps which he has taken to secure the organization of a national chamber of commerce. I heartily commend his view that the plan of a trade commission which looks to the fixing of prices is altogether impractical and ought not for a moment to be considered as a possible solution of the trust question.

The trust question in the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law is gradually solving itself, is maintaining the principle and restoring the practice of competition, and if the law is quietly but firmly enforced, business will adjust itself to the statutory requirements, and the unrest in commercial circles provoked by the trust discussion will disappear.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

In conformity with a joint resolution of Congress, an Executive proclamation was issued last February, inviting the nations of the world to participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to be held at San Francisco to celebrate the construction of the Panama Canal. A sympathetic response was immediately forthcoming, and several nations have already selected the sites for their buildings. In furtherance of my invitation, a special commission visited European countries during the past summer, and received assurances of hearty cooperation in the task of bringing together a universal industrial, military, and naval display on an unprecedented scale. It is evident that the exposition will be an accurate mirror of the world's activities as they appear 400 years after the date of the discovery of the Pacific Ocean.

It is the duty of the United States to make the nations welcome at San Francisco and to facilitate such acquaintance between them and ourselves as will promote the expansion of commerce and familiarize the world with the new trade route through the Panama Canal. The action of the State governments and individuals assures a comprehensive exhibit of the resources of this country and of the progress of the people. This participation by States and individuals should be supplemented by an adequate showing of the varied and unique activities of the National Government. The United States can not with good grace invite foreign governments to erect buildings and make expensive exhibits while itself refusing to participate. Nor would it be wise to forego the opportunity to join with other nations in the inspiring interchange of ideas tending to promote intercourse, friendship, and commerce. It is the duty of the Government to foster and build up commerce through the canal, just as it was the duty of the Government to construct it.

I earnestly recommend the appropriation at this session of such a sum as will enable the United States to construct a suitable building, install a governmental exhibit, and otherwise participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in a manner commensurate with the dignity of a nation whose guests are to be the peoples of the world. I recommend also such legislation as will facilitate the entry of material intended for exhibition and protect foreign exhibitors against infringement of patents and the unauthorized copying of patterns and designs. All aliens sent to San Francisco to construct and care for foreign buildings and exhibits should be admitted without restraint or embarrassment.

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND THE CITY OF WASHINGTON.

The city of Washington is a beautiful city, with a population of 352,936, of whom 98,667 are colored. The annual municipal budget is about $14,000,000. The presence of the National Capitol and other governmental structures constitutes the chief beauty and interest of the city. The public grounds are extensive, and the opportunities for improving the city and making it still more attractive are very great. Under a plan adopted some years ago, one half the cost of running the city is paid by taxation upon the property, real and personal, of the citizens and residents, and the other half is borne by the General Government. The city is expanding at a remarkable rate, and this can only be accounted for by the coming here from other parts of the country of well-to-do people who, having finished their business careers elsewhere, build and make this their permanent place of residence.

On the whole, the city as a municipality is very well governed. It is well lighted, the water supply is good, the streets are well paved, the police force is well disciplined, crime is not flagrant, and while it has purlieus and centers of vice, like other large cities, they are not exploited, they do not exercise any influence or control in the government of the city, and they are suppressed in as far as it has been found practicable. Municipal graft is inconsiderable. There are interior courts in the city that are noisome and centers of disease and the refuge of criminals, but Congress has begun to clean these out, and progress has been made in the case of the most notorious of these, which is known as Willow Tree Alley. This movement should continue.

The mortality for the past year was at the rate of 17.80 per 1,000 of both races; among the whites it was 14.61 per thousand, and among the blacks 26.12 per thousand. These are the lowest mortality rates ever recorded in the District.

One of the most crying needs in the government of the District is a tribunal or public authority for the purpose of super vising the corporations engaged in the operation of public utili-Such a bill is pending in Congress and ought to pass. Washington should show itself under the direction of Congress to be a city with a model form of government, but as long as authority over public utilities is withheld from the municipal government it must always be defective.

Without undue criticism of the present street railway accommodations, it can be truly said that under the spur of a public utilities commission they might be substantially improved.

While the school system of Washington perhaps might be bettered in the economy of its management and the distribution of its buildings, its usefulness has nevertheless greatly increased in recent years, and it now offers excellent facilities for primary and secondary education.

From time to time there is considerable agitation in Washington in favor of granting the citizens of the city the franchise and constituting an elective government. I am strongly opposed to this change. The history of Washington discloses a number of experiments of this kind, which have always been abandoned as unsatisfactory. The truth is this is a city governed by a popular body, to wit, the Congress of the United States, selected from the people of the United States, who own Washington. The people who come here to live do so with the knowledge of the origin of the city and the restrictions, and therefore voluntarily give up the privilege of living in a municipality governed by popular vote. Washington is so unique in its origin and in its use for housing and localizing the sovereignty of the Nation that the people who live here must regard its peculiar character and must be content to subject themselves to the control of a body selected by all the people of the Nation. I agree that there are certain inconveniences growing out of the government of a city by a national legislature like Congress, and it would perhaps be possible to lessen these by the delegation by Congress to the District Commissioners of greater legislative power for the enactment of local laws than they now possess, especially those of a police character.

Every loyal American has a personal pride in the beauty of Washington and in its development and growth. There is no one with a proper appreciation of our Capital City who would favor a niggardly policy in respect to expenditures from the National Treasury to add to the attractiveness of this city, which belongs to every citizen of the entire country, and which no citizen visits without a sense of pride of ownership. We have had restored by a Commission of Fine Arts, at the instance of a committee of the Senate, the original plan of the French engineer L'Enfant for the city of Washington, and we know with great certainty the course which the improvement of Washington should take. Why should there be delay in making this improvement in so far as it involves the extension of the parking system and the construction of greatly needed public build-ings? Appropriate buildings for the State Department, the Department of Justice, and the Department of Commerce and Labor have been projected, plans have been approved, and nothing is wanting but the appropriations for the beginning and completion of the structures. A hall of archives is also badly needed, but nothing has been done toward its construction, although the land for it has long been bought and paid for. Plans have been made for the union of Potomac Park with the valley of Rock Creek and Rock Creek Park, and the necessity for the connection between the Soldiers' Home and Rock Creek Park calls for no comment. I ask again why there should be delay in carrying out these plans? We have the money in the Treasury, the plans are national in their scope, and the improvement should be treated as a national project. The plan will find a hearty approval throughout the country. I am quite sure, from the information which I have, that, at comparatively small expense, from that part of the District of Columbia which was retroceded to Virginia the portion including the Arlington estate, Fort Myer, and the palisades of the Potomac can be acquired by purchase and the jurisdiction of the State of Virginia and the purchase and the jurisdiction of the State of Virginia and ginia over this land ceded to the Nation. This ought to be

The construction of the Lincoln Memorial and of a memorial bridge from the base of the Lincoln Monument to Arlington would be an appropriate and symbolic expression of the union of the North and the South at the Capital of the Nation. I urge upon Congress the appointment of a commission to undertake these national improvements and to submit a plan for their execution; and when the plan has been submitted and approved and the work carried out Washington will really become what it ought to be-the most beautiful city in the world.

WM. II. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 19, 1912.

EXTENSION OF CAPITOL GROUNDS (H. DOC. NQ. 1186).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report relative to the acquirement of title to certain property necessary to enlarge the Capitol grounds and the receipts therefrom from the time of such acquirement, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $40,000 for the purchase of a site and the completion of the post-office building at Osage City, Kans., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to pay Ivy L. Merrill, a quarter-blood Pottawatomie Indian, Pottawatomie County, Okla., in full compensation for injuries received while in the employ of the United States Government, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000 for repair and improvement of the road to Fort Canby, Wash., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $45,260 to defray the expenses of the First Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Alaska, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the Second Assistant Commissioner, Indian Office, from $2,250 to $2,750, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to authorize one assistant in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac to act as or be appointed director of the Nautical Almanac Office, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SNAKE RIVER DAM, WASH.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I have a copy of a speech delivered by Hon. Henry M. Teller, of Colorado, in the Senate of the United States March 31 and April 2, 1908, on the question of authorizing the Benton Water Co. to construct a dam across Snake River in the State of Washington. I ask that the speech be printed as a Senate document and that 500 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama subsequently said: I made a request for the printing as a Senate document of a speech made by an ex-Senator. I am informed that under the custom of the Senate such matter has not been printed as public documents, and I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is withdrawn.

POSSIBILITIES OF A DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION (S. DOC. NO. 988).

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask to have printed as a Senate document an article by Senator Newlands, published in the Independent Magazine, on the Possibilities of a Democratic Administration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the message from the House which was not disposed of yesterday be laid before the Senate.

The amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert a substitute, was laid before the Senate by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has already been read and a motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts. It is that the Senate disagree to the amendment made by the House of Representatives, ask a conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. Lodge, Mr. Dhlingham, and Mr. Smith of South Carolina conferees on the part of the Senate.

UNITED STATES COURT FOR PORTO RICO.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I report from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico the bill (H. R. 10169) to provide for holding the district court of the United States for Porto Rico during the absence from the island of the United States district judge and for the trial of cases in the event of the disqualification of or inability to act by the said judge favorably without amendment

Mr. President, in explanation I should like to say that the bill is for the purpose of enacting legislation to enable the President to fill the temporary vacancy in the district court of Porto Rico, an emergency existing by reason of the fact that there is no other judge who can be appointed under the law to take the place of the judge who is absent or disqualified to try a case. There is a great deal of important litigation pending in that court. Among other matters are receiverships of a number of large companies, which require the constant supervision of the court.

This bill has been passed by the House of Representatives and has been reported favorably, unanimously, by all the members of the Senate committee who are in the city. I submit the report, and ask to have printed the accompanying letter as a part of the report of the committee, and ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the report will be received. Does the Senator from Washington desire to have the letter to which he refers printed in the RECORD?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No, sir; I simply desire that it shall be printed as a part of the report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection that order will be made.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read by title.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 10169) to provide for holding the district court of the United States for Porto Rico during the absence from the island of the United States district judge and for the trial of cases in the event of the disqualification of or inability to act by the said judge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, my attention was diverted for a moment, and I am not sure whether the bill provides for the designation of this judge by the judges of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico or for an appointment by the governor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. By the governor.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I venture to say that we could not authorize the governor of Porto Rico to appoint an officer of the United States. The only way anybody can become an officer of the United States is either through appointment by the President, confirmed by the Senate, or Congress may vest the appointment in the President alone or in the head of a department or in the courts of law. I think Congress could authorize the supreme court of that island to designate a judge, or it could authorize the Attorney General here to do it, but I am not of the opinion that Congress can authorize the governor of Porto Rico to appoint any officer of the United States. therefore suggest to the Senator that we might have a court there which would be no court at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I can hardly agree with the view taken by the Senator from Texas as to lack of power in Congress to authorize the governor of Porto Rico to assign a judge who is already in office to act as a temporary judge of another court. There are a great many precedents for laws of that kind. The Senator from Texas is familiar with the act constituting the Court of Commerce, which authorizes and directs the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States

Mr. BAILEY. I do not doubt that we can authorize the courts to do it; the Constitution expressly provides that. I do not doubt that we could authorize the head of a department to do it; the Constitution expressly authorizes that; but the difficulty I have in this matter is, that here we propose to authorize the governor of Porto Rico to designate this officer.

It may be that this judge, already being an officer of the United States, can be designated in this way to hold the court. I will ask the Senator from Washington if there is any supreme court in that island?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is.

Mr. BAILEY. Then why not let the chief justice of that court designate one of the members to perform this duty?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. If Senators will permit, I will state that the same objection would lie against that supreme court as against the governor, because it is not a Federal court; it is a court local to Porto Rico. This appointee is to act in the place of a Federal judge. If the objection of the Senator from Texas is valid, the appointment ought to be made by one of our Federal judges or by the Department of Justice. The supreme court of the Territory of Porto Rico is exactly in one sense in the same condition as the governor. It is not a Federal office.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, none of these Territorial officers are Federal judges, as we commonly understand the term under the Constitution; in other words, they are appointed not in virtue of the judicial clause of the Constitution. If they were appointed so, they must be appointed for life. They are were appointed so, they must be appointed for life. appointed under our authority to govern the Territory, and I imagine that we could authorize the court there to make this appointment. The point is purely that this man is to be an officer of the United States. I would have absolutely no doubt in my mind on the question if he was not already an officer and thus simply assigned. I am not very confident that, being an officer of the United States, he could not be assigned by the governor under the authority of an act of Congress; but I have no doubt whatever that if he were not an officer the governor of Porto Rico could not appoint him an officer of the United States, because he does not fall within any definition of the head of a department or a court of law.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I will hand to the Senator from Texas the section of the Constitution, which he has practically stated the substance of, in order that he may read it to the

Mr. BAILEY. Very well-

He shall have power-

The language refers to the President-

He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

Now, obviously the governor of Porto Rico is not the head of a department, nor is he a court of law, and consequently he can not, under the Constitution, appoint an officer of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President-

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one moment, if the Senator will permit me.

I understood that the Senator from Texas had about concluded, but, if he will permit me, I should like to comment upon that portion of the Constitution which he has just read and upon which the Senator seems to rely. The phrase authorizing Congress to provide for the appointment of inferior officers by the President alone or by the heads of the departments or by the judiciary evidently does not include Federal judges.

Mr. BAILEY. This is not a Federal judge as we ordinarily understand that term. Although a Federal judge of a circuit court or a district court is an inferior officer, or, at least, is an officer of an inferior court, the Constitution expressly authorizes Congress to establish inferior courts-that is, as contradistinguished from the Supreme Court of the United States-and I am rather inclined to think that, under the plain language of the Constitution, if Congress were unwise enough, it could authorize the President alone to appoint the judges of our inferior Federal courts; but, as I have said, the officer affected by the pending bill is not such an officer as we commonly mean when we speak of a Federal judge; he is a Territorial judge.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in either alternative, whether this judge is one of the higher officers, the appointment of whom can not be delegated by Congress, in which case the constitutional provision which the Senator cites has no application whatever

Mr. BAILEY. It applies to all officers of the United States. Mr. POINDEXTER. It only applies to inferior officers; it does not apply to the chief officers of the United States, as I understand.

Mr. BAILEY. If they are not inferior, then the President would have to appoint them with the consent of the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If they are not inferior, then the in-stance which I cited of the selection of circuit judges to sit as members of the Commerce Court is a precedent for such legislation. The Senator then turns to this express provision of the Constitution, which he says is applicable because it includes inferior officers.

The Commerce Court judges were appointed Mr. BAILEY. by the President and confirmed by the Senate. They thus become judges under the judicial clause of the Constitution, and what the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court does with respect to them is merely to assign them.

I stated frankly to the Senator in the beginning, although I am not very confident about it, that this officer, already being an officer of the United States, a Territorial judge, Congress might authorize the governor to assign him; but certainly if he is not already an officer of the United States the governor can not make him one; and, although I shall not insist upon it, I think it would be safer to let the court designate the judge. Then, whether it be an appointment or a designation, he would be safe in law; or, upon proper certificate, allow the Attorney General or the President alone to designate or appoint this judge. I do not know while on my feet here exactly what duties are prescribed for these different judges. Of course, if this new duty is added to any of the duties which judges in Porto Rico must now perform, we have ample authority to pass this bill; and the only question in my mind is simply whether this amounts to an appointment of this particular judge as an officer of the United States.

I recall years ago when, under the anomalous conditions then existing in the Indian Territory, it was sought to provide for cases in which the judge might be disqualified by authorizing the bar to elect a judge. I thought then it was not competent, and upon a discussion of the matter the House recommitted that bill to the Judiciary Committee, concurring in my view that it was not competent to authorize the bar of the court to elect a judge. I know it is not competent to authorize the governor of Porto Rico to appoint a judge of a United States court, but I do not express any very confident opinion that this is such a case. This may be within the power of Congress upon the ground that it is merely the designation of a judge already an officer of the United States to perform another duty as that same officer of the United States. That may be the case.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I think there is not a great deal of difference of opinion between the Senator from Texas and myself about this matter. It seems to me that the effect of the bill is simply to enlarge the duties of a judge of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico, and providing that under certain circumstances, namely, when he is designated by the governor, he may ex officio perform certain duties in addition to those which are now provided for in the organic act. I want to read just a paragraph of a statement made by a lawyer of Porto Rico, which is confirmed by the Attorney General and by the head of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, as to the importance of some immediate action on this matter.

Mr. BAILEY. I can understand that.

Will the Senator from Washington Mr. SUTHERLAND. permit me a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I recall, under the system which we had for the appointment of judges in the various Territories, judges were appointed to the Territorial supreme court, and the governor assigned them to their respective districts. that correct?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, would this be any more than

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me, Mr. President-

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I understand from reading the bill, the judge has already been appointed in pursuance of the Constitution; and this bill simply provides that the governor may assign him to certain judicial duties.

Mr. POINDEXTER. To sit in place of another judge.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. It seems to me that is nothing more than Congress did repeatedly in dealing with the Territories, appointing the judge first as a judge of the supreme court, and then permitting the governor to assign the different supreme court judges to the various districts.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment? Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota. Mr. NELSON. It is my recollection, although I may be mistaken, that I was a member of the committee at the time we passed the organic act for Porto Rico. The judge referred to in the bill is distinctly a Federal judge. He has simply juris-diction in such cases as a district judge would have in one of the States. They have a Territorial or local supreme court and legislature were office an independent judicial system. This one judge is a Federal of the United States.

judge in exactly the same sense as is a United States district judge in one of the States.

Mr. BAILEY. He could not be.

Mr. NELSON. I mean his jurisdiction is the same.

Mr. BAILEY. That might be.

Mr. NELSON. That is what I meant. His jurisdiction is the same; but he does not have jurisdiction like judges in our Territories, who have a Territorial side and a Federal side. This judge has strictly a Federal side and Federal jurisdiction over what in a State would be Federal cases.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Minnesota

Mr. POINDEXTER. Before the Senator from Texas begins, I should like to read just a paragraph from the organic act, so that the Senator will have in mind the structure of these courts.

Mr. BAILEY. I have not that in my mind now.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I read from the organic act of Porto Rico:

Provided, however, That the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court and the marshal thereof shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the judges of the district courts shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the executive council.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, those courts last mentioned must not be courts of the United States, and their officers must not be officers of the United States, because, if so, the governor can not be authorized to appoint them.

But, Mr. President, another thing occurs to me just here, and that is, that I am not so certain that all the officials who serve in Porto Rico are considered officers of the United States. Certainly the judges who are appointed by the governor of that Territory and confirmed by the council of it are not officers of the United States.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does Texas yield to the Senator from California? Does the Senator from

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

It seems to me that the constitutional provi-Mr. WORKS. sion limiting the power of appointment to office has no bearing upon this question at all, for the simple reason that this is not an appointment to an office. There might be some question about the power to vest in a judge having one jurisdiction the power to preside over a court having an entirely different jurisdiction, one of them being a Federal court and the other not. That would seem to me to be a much more serious question than the one raised by the Senator from Texas under the Constitution.

Mr. BAILEY. There could be no debate; there could be no difference of opinion upon the question which I originally raised; and that is if this were the appointment of an officer of the United States, then plainly the governor of that Territory could not be authorized to make the appointment. It seems, as we discuss it, that this is not the appointment of an officer, but is a proposal to designate an officer already appointed and existing to perform the duties of another office.

The difference between these two offices and these two jurisdictions does raise the further question which the Senator from California has suggested; but that was not in my mind, and probably it would have been just as well if I had not raised any question about it, because I frankly say to the Senate that I have never examined the organic act of Porto Rico, and I am not sure upon what theory it proceeds.

The extract which the Senator from Washington has just read presents to my mind the usual condition of a Territorial government, where some of the officers hold their appointments from the United States and other officers hold their appointments from the governor, who is himself appointed by the President of the United States.

I would not have the slightest doubt in my mind about the power of Congress, under its authority to govern this Territory, to give to the people of the Territory, or to any of the functionaries of the Territory, the right to appoint officers or elect officers for the Territory. That procedure is familiar to us all, and has been for many years, in all of our Territories. those officers are not officers of the United States; they are officers of the Territory; and evidently some of the judges concerning whose appointment the Senator has read from the organic act were not judges of the United States. They are not officers of the United States, but they are judges of the Territory of Porto Rico, just as when Utah was a Territory they had their local officers. I have no doubt they elected some of their judges. They certainly elected members to their Territorial legislature. They elected their sheriffs and constables, But those sheriffs and constables and those members of the legislature were officers of the Territory of Utah and not officers Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President— Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator will permit me for just a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the system by which we appointed Territorial judges provision was made for the appointment of judges of the supreme court. Then each of the Territories was authorized to create districts and fix the limits of the districts, and so on, and the governor was authorized, until otherwise provided by law—that meant the law of the Territory—to assign the judges to those various districts. So if the assignment of the judges to those various district courts and, indeed, the creation of the districts themselves could in any manner be said to be appointments, that would have been as objectionable under the constitutional provision as the bill to which the Senator has called attention.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no; that is not my view of it at all. other words, the President of the United States might be given the power to appoint a Territorial officer, but no power in the Territory could be given the right to appoint an officer of the United States, it being expressly provided in the Constitution how a man may become an officer of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But these were officers of the United States

Mr. BAILEY.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Only, the Senator very well said, they were not appointed under the judicial clause of the Constitution, and therefore they did not hold a life tenure.

Mr. BAILEY. They held for a term of years.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; they held for a limited term of years provided by the law. But still they held office, as I understand it-the Senator from Washington knows about it better than I-precisely the same way as these judges in Porto Rico, for a term of years.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, if they do, if this judge is an officer of Porto Rico, we can have him appointed as we please, in my opinion; but I am not sure whether they are treated as officers of the United States there. My understanding is that there is not a form of real Territorial government there.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is a form of Territorial government there.

Mr. BAILEY. I said a form of real Territorial government. Mr. LODGE. Porto Rico is not a Territory.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Were the judges referred to in the

Mr. SUTHERNAND. Were the judges referred to in the bill appointed for a term of years?

Mr. BAILEY. I am sure they are.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not advised as to whether it was for a term of years or for life.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have before me—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota? Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I have here the section of the organic act under which this judge was appointed. It was not read by the Senator from Washington. Here is the language:

Senator from Washington. Here is the language:

Sec. 34. That Porto Rico shall constitute a judicial district to be called "the district of Porto Rico." The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a district judge, a district attorney, and a marshal for said district, each for a term of four years, unless sooner removed by the President. The district court for said district shall be called the district court of the United States for Porto Rico and shall have power to appoint all necessary officials and assistants, including a clerk, an interpreter, and such commissioners as may be necessary, who shall have like power and duties as are exercised and performed by commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States, and shall have, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction of district courts of the United States, jurisdiction of all cases cognizant in the circuit courts of the United States, and shall proceed therein in the same manner as a circuit court.

With the exception of being appointed for a four-year term, the jurisdiction of this judge is limited strictly to what appertains to a Federal district judge in the States, and he has no jurisdiction of cases arising under local or Territorial law.

Mr. BAILEY. That is exactly what we have always known in this country as a United States court for a Territory, and that is exactly what that is now in Porto Rico. It is a United States court for the district of Porto Rico, and the officers of that court are officers of the United States, undoubtedly.

Mr. LODGE. But they are not constitutional judges.

Mr. BAILEY. But, of course, not constitutional judges. While I know the governor could not appoint an officer of that court-because the officer of that court is an officer of the United States-I am not so clear that the governor may not be authorized to designate an officer of the United States court to perform some duty with respect to the local jurisdiction of that island. At any rate, Mr. President, I am not clear enough about it to resist the passage of the bill.

I am sure it would be better, if the Senator were willing to amend it, to vest that power of designation in the chief justice of the court if you please rather than in the governor; but I leave it.

Mr. WORKS. As I understand the effect of this bill, it provides for the appointment by the governor of a judge who has been appointed by the governor to preside over a Federal court in the place of a judge appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Then he could not preside in the Federal court. That is certain.

Mr. LODGE. Excuse me. The governor is to designate. Mr. WORKS. I understand. I do not mean "appoint."

Mr. LODGE. It is not a judge appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. WORKS. The governor is to have the power to assign to another jurisdiction a judge appointed entirely by his own power and authority.

Mr. LODGE. He is to assign him to another jurisdiction.

Mr. WORKS. Certainly. The question in my mind whether he has the power to assign such judges appointed by a different power and having entirely different jurisdiction to preside over a Federal court.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from California is in error as to the appointment of Supreme Court judges of Porto The organic act provides that they shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the

Mr. WORKS. But, as I understand, it authorizes the appointment of other judges as well.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Which provision-that of the organic act:

Mr. WORKS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. T. Mr. WORKS. The bill. The bill?

Mr. WORKS. The one.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; not of other judges, only a judge of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico. The effect of the bill is simply adding a duty to the functions of the supreme court judge of Porto Rico. I apprehend that there can be no continued in the court of the supremental than the court of the supremental than the recognition of the supremental than the tention made that it is not within the power of Congress at any time to enlarge the functions of any court of the United States, and that the judge holding that office would have authority, although he had been previously appointed, to perform those additional duties. It is not an appointment to office, but simply makes him eligible to perform additional duties and to provide that in case of emergency he shall be designated therefor by the governor of Porto Rico.

The designation is a mere administrative act. Somebody has to designate the judge, and Congress has power, undoubtedly there is nothing in the Constitution in conflict with it-to say what authority shall designate the particular supreme judge to temporarily perform the duties of the district court. Both judges are Federal judges in the sense that they are holding office under the Federal law. Both are appointed by the President; both are confirmed by the Senate.

I have here a letter, from which I will read just a few lines, from an attorney practicing in Porto Rico, who says:

I am an attorney, practicing at the bar at San Juan, P. R., and am interested in various matters of litigation before the United States court of the island, and among other interests there are at present two sugar companies, one of them having properties valued at more than a million dollars, which are at present being operated by receivers under the orders of the Federal court, and which receiverships require constant attention and orders from the Federal court in order to attend to the interests of the interested parties.

It is obvious that it is an emergency case and that there ought to be some immediate action. I think there is a great deal of merit in the suggestions of the Senator from Texas, but if the bill is amended in accordance with those suggestions, it will have to go back to the House of Representatives. This is not my bill. I did not prepare it. It is a House bill. It came to the Senate. If amended, it would have to go over until after the holidays, and under the procedure and the pressure of business in the House of Representatives a considerable length of time might elapse then before it could be taken up.

If there is a serious defect in the procedure provided for by this bill, which I do not think there is, it can be taken care of, of course, by an amendment to the act which can be passed at

Mr. WORKS. I have no desire to oppose the passage of the bill. I made my suggestions with respect to it, and I shall not object to its passage this evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I merely wish to say, out of an abundance of caution, that I desire to be regarded as voting against the passage of the bill. If I had the time to read it carefully, I might agree to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From the Committee on Patents I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 10648) amending an act entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with the Indian tribes, and to protect the same," and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will simply say that that section is reenacted with an amendment which appears in the bill, commencing in line 9, page 1, with the last two words in the line, "or of," and including line 17, the effect of which is to insert this language in the law as it stands at present, to wit:

Or of any name, distinguishing mark, character, emblem, colors, flag, or banner adopted by any institution, organization, club, or society which was incorporated in any State in the United States prior to the date of the adoption and use by the applicant: Provided, That said name, distinguishing mark, character, emblem, colors, flag, or banner was adopted and publicly used by said institution, organization, club, or society prior to the date of adoption and use by the applicant.

It is a bill which has passed the House, having been unanimously reported by the House Committee on Patents, and is reported with the approval of all the members of the Senate committee who are now in town, which are five members out of the seven.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, until Thursday, January 2, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 19, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, we bless Thy holy name for the beautiful custom which obtains throughout Christendom in the Yuletide season, and we most fervently pray that the Christ spirit abroad in the land, knocking at the door of every heart, may be received with joy and gladness; that the affections of the home, ties of friendship, and brotherly love may be strengthened; that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. And now, O Father, as we separate, in memory of the advent of the world's great Exemplar may Thy blessing be upon us to keep us in health and strength and bring us together again at the appointed time stronger, purer, nobler, the better fitted to do the work whereunto Thou hast called us; and we will ascribe all praise to Thee in the name of Him who lived and died that the world might know Thy love eternal and everlasting. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RESIGNATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communications from the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

DECEMBER 19, 1912,

To the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. Washington, D. C.

MR. SPEAKER: I ask to be excused from further service on the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives and also on the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

JOS. T. ROBINSON, M. C.,

Sixth Arkansas District.

DECEMBER 19, 1912.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

You are hereby informed that I have tendered my resignation as a Member of the Sixty-second Congress, to take effect January 14, 1913.

Jos. T. Robinson, M. C.,

Sixth Arkansas District.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation from the committees will be accepted. The other is simply an announce-

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. Richardson was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Xantippe Jackson, Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS ON IMMIGRATION BILL

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks on the immigration bill as it relates to Asiatic exclusion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on Asiatic immigration. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker— Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into-

The SPEAKER. The Chair promised to recognize the other gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] about the reference of a bill, and under the rule he comes first. The Chair will recognize the other gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] afterwards.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I desire to be recognized afterwards

Mr. SLAYDEN. I desire to say to my colleague I shall take only a minute, because, if objection is made, under the rule I can not. I simply want to invite the attention of the House to what, as I previously stated, I conceive to be an erroneous reference of Senate concurrent resolution 32 which on the 13th of this month was sent to the Committee on Appropriations instead of to the Committee on the Library that had jurisdiction of this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] moves to change the reference of Senate concurrent resolution 32 from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on

This motion is not debatable. the Library.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the privilege of making a brief reference to the rules that touch on this matter.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I will have to object to that.

The gentleman from Missouri objects. The SPEAKER.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make the motion the Speaker has just stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, to elucidate this matter, that if this change of reference is made a change also ought to be made about the report. The Clerk will report the concurrent resolution, so the House will understand it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 32.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the plan, design, and location for a Lincoln Memorial, determined upon and recommended to Congress December 4, 1912, by the commission created by the act entitled "An act to provide a commission to secure plans and designs for a monument or memorial to the memory of Abraham Lincoln," approved February 9, 1911, be, and the same are hereby, approved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the change of reference of the concurrent resolution from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on the Library.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BORLAND. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 14.
Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bor-LAND] makes a point that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MADDEN. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 35.

So the motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Thursday, January 2, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 2, 1913.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our help in ages past, our hope for years to come, as Thou dost open before us the portals of a new year we enter with thanksgiving for all Thy mercies and with fervent prayers for Thy continued guldance. Hitherto, O Lord, hast Thou led us; take not from us now, we beseech Thee, Thy tender compassions. We know not the way before us, neither do we ask; we are content, our Father, to follow where Thou shalt lead us and to commit our lives to Thy keeping. So receive us, and grant that no sorrow may overwhelm us, and that no prosperity may make us forget Thee. And so at the end of the year, as at its beginning, may we render unto Thee thanksgiving and praise. And Thine shall be the glory now and forevermore.

WILLIAM O. BRADLEY, a Senator from the State of Kentucky, and John W. Kern, a Senator from the State of Indiana, appeared in their seats to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER took the chair as President pro tempore under the order of the Senate of December 16, 1912

Mr. LODGE. I present a communication from the president of the Massachusetts Historical Society. It is very brief, and I ask that it be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on the Library.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MASSACHUSETTS HISTORICAL SOCIETY, Boston, December 16, 1912.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The Massachusetts Historical Society urges the erection of a national archives building in the city of Washington, and the transfer to it from time to time of such archives in the possession of the various departments and Congress as are not needed for the immediate service of administrative or legislative routine. The wholesale injury and loss of such archives in the past, the absence of organized care and arrangement in the preservation of what remain, and the lack of space and trained attendance for use and consultation call for such a central building and a properly organized bureau of archives. Widely scattered as these records now are, and often placed in storage where they can not be consulted or guarded from the dangers surrounding such material, they are carried at great cost and inconvenience both to officers in charge and to investigators in history. The preservation of this historical and administrative material can not be too strongly urged, and a central archives building is the only rational and economic solution of the problem.

e problem. On behalf of the Massachusetts Historical Society and by authority of CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, President.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of Local Union No. 1117, United Mine Workers of America, of Marion, Ill., praying for the passage of the so-called injunction limitation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

EXTENSION DEPARTMENTS IN AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to present to the Senate numerous additional indorsements of the bill for the creation of extension departments in the land-grant agricultural colleges. I do not ask that they be printed in the RECORD, but I will call attention to them.

They are from the Maine Seed Improvement Association; the Maine Dairymen's Association; the Maine Association of Agricultural Students; the Maine Creamerymen's Association; the Maine Live Stock Breeders' Association; the Maine Federathe Maine Live Stock Breeders' Association; the Maine Federation of Agricultural Associations; Cumberland Grange, No. 2, of Rhode Island; Richmond Grange, No. 6, of Rhode Island; Laurel Grange, No. 4, of Rhode Island; Ashaway Grange, No. 50, of Rhode Island; Quonocontaug Grange, No. 48, of Rhode Island; West Virginia Federation of Women's Clubs; Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs; Hope Valley Grange, No. 7, of Rhode Island.

I wish also to call attention to a short article by Dr. Kenyon S. Butterfield, president of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, urging the prompt passage of this measure. The article appeared in Business America. He refers to the impossibility of passing the Page bill at the present session of Congress, and, while approving the general policy of Federal aid to industrial education, he questions the wisdom of passing the bill in its present form, and suggests the appointment of experts from different parts of the country to whom the measure should be referred to work out the details and have the same ready for introduction at the next session of Congress.

I ask that the article by Dr. Butterfield be printed in the RECORD, and hope that the views he presents will receive consideration by Senators on account of their clearness and the value of the source from which they come.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been reported to the Senate the petitions will lie on the table, and, without objection, the article referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

AN IMPORTANT ISSUE.

The article referred to is as follows:

AN IMPORTANT ISSUE.

There are now before Congress two bills of vital significance in the development of American agriculture.

One bill, introduced by Congressman Lever, of South Carolina, is known as H. R. 22871, and is intended "to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States." It is sincerely hoped that this bill will be passed.

A similar bill was introduced into the Senate by Senator Hoke Smith, of Georgia, who is now championing the House bill in the Senate.

The other bill, introduced by Senator Page, of Vermont, is known as S. 3, and if passed would make it possible for "the National Government to ecoperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts."

The terms of both of these bills and arguments for them are simply stated in the articles by Congressman Lever and Senator Page, which appear in this issue. We have also outlined in another article the main features of what we regard as the most important reasons for the passage of the agricultural extension bill.

Both of these measures should be passed eventually, because both are essential to the best development of our American system of agricultural education.

Unfortunately some antagonism has been created between the friends of the two bills. The main provisions of the extension bill are incorporated in the Page bill. This is a mistake. The two do not belong together. The extension bill is intended to complete the system of Federal aid to colleges of agriculture which now provide for instruction to students, and research or investigation, and which ought also to provide for that third great task of the colleges, the extension of agriculture is concerned. We know enough about scientific agriculture

On the other hand the Page bill proposes a system of institutions of high-school grade partly for the purpose of teaching agricultural college. Very little practical agriculture can be taught in the lower grades. We need agricultural departments in the public schools as well as special schools of agriculture. We believe that this work also should be supported in part by the National Government. We do not agree with all the details of the Page bill, but the purpose is sound, the object of vital consequence, and the appropriation should be made. The bill, however, should not include the extension service. The two bills have different alms and cover entirely different grounds. The funds appropriated by them must be administered separately, and it is neither statesmanlike nor wise to bring these two things into one bill.

We therefore urge all the friends of both measures to try to come together in a plan for cooperation. The practical thing to do is to pass the extension bill at the short session of Congress and then to call a conference of not to exceed 25 experts, representing all the interests involved in the legislation contemplated by the Page bill, and patiently thrash out the details of the bill in the light of a few broad, general principles that should be agreed upon at the outset. This is a bill that involves a good deal of money. More than that, it involves a new procedure in our whole scheme of education. It should not be entered upon hastily. No bill should pass Congress that does not have the practically unanimous approval of all those institutions and agencies that will be obliged to cooperate when the bill becomes a law.

This is no time for misunderstanding or controversy. It is a time for action, and the practical, sensible action we have just indicated. And we hope that every friend of these two bills will accept this suggestion and that it may be acted upon at once.

It is peculiarly appropriate that the extension bill should pass before January 1. In 1862 President Lincoln, during the darkest coincidence is merely a matter of sentiment, but it is a worthy sentiment.

The extension bill has passed the House. It simply requires the prompt action of the Senate immediately on its assembling this month. We know of no more important act of legislation for advancing the welfare of our agricultural people, nor one that promises more directly or immediately to reduce the cost of living, than the immediate passage of this bill.

KENYON L. BUTTERFIELD.

SANITARY WRAPPING OF BREAD IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McCUMBER. I introduce a bill which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 7853) to provide for the sanitary wrapping of bread in the District of Columbia was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, as follows:

on the District of Columbia, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation engaged in the manufacture or baking of bread to be sold for food in the District of Columbia to remove such bread from the building in which it is baked or manufactured before inclosing it in a suitable sanitary wrapper or package that will protect it from dust, insects, or other contamination: And provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any dealer or other person to sell, deliver, or cause to be delivered in the District of Columbia any bread intended to be used as food unless the same is inclosed in a suitable sanitary wrapper or package that will protect it from dust, insects, or other contamination, and any person who shall violate the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof for each offense shall be fined not to exceed $100 or imprisoned not to exceed three months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT IN CHINA.

Mr. BACON. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 146) providing for the recognition of the republican Government in China was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the people of China have asserted the right of self-government, and in pursuance thereof have thrown off the rule of monarchy and sought to establish for themselves a representative republican Government; and Whereas in the time which has elapsed since the establishment of their present republican Government satisfactory evidence has been given that a permanent and stable Government has been established and will be maintained: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the present republican Government of China is hereby recognized by the United States of America, with all the powers and privileges of their intercourse and relations with this Government properly appertaining to and in general extended to independent and sovereign governments and nations.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, before moving the reference of the joint resolution, I desire to say one word.

It has been a subject matter of discussion almost ever since the foundation of this Government as to whether the function of the recognition of an independent government, or, when there has been a change in government, the recognition of the stability and authority of a government is a function which belongs to the Executive or to the legislative branch of the Government. When I say "legislative," I should properly say the lawmaking branch of the Government, which includes both the two Houses and the President.

By some it is contended, and has been contended with much earnestness, that it is a function which exclusively belongs to the executive branch of the Government, whereas by others it has been contended with equal earnestness that it belongs to the lawmaking power of the Government. I believe the more conservative view is that which is represented by the opinion of many that the initiative can be taken by either the Executive alone or by the lawmaking power, embracing the joint action of both the legislative and the executive branches of the Government-the Congress and the President-acting in a legislative capacity. In my opinion, the ultimate power of decision is with the lawmaking power; and where the final action in such case has been taken by the Executive, it has been final through the acquiescence and approval of the Congress. But without now stopping to discuss the question I simply make the statement in order that my attitude may not be misunderstood in introducing the joint resolution. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment relative to the pay of electrical expert aids in the classified service of the Navy, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs ing at Olympia, Wash.; and S. 3974. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States public building at Denver, Colo.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of what is known as the omnibus claims bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment

Mr. CRAWFORD. The amendment which I offered. Mr. BRANDEGEE. I rise to a point of order, Mr. President. Mr. LODGE. It is utterly impossible to hear what is going on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut will state his point of order. The point of order is that there is no

Mr. BRANDEGEE. order in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut raises the point of order that there is too much disorder in the Chamber and that business can not be transacted. Chair will appeal to Senators to preserve order, and will especially appeal to visitors in the Chamber and in the galleries to preserve order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, my amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. President of the Amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. President of the Massachusetts [Mr. President of Lodge] has never been read at length. It was only partially read. I do not wish to call the bill up with a view of taking the time of the Senate now, as I understand the Senator from Texas [Mr. Bailey] wishes to address the Senate. I only call the bill up so that it may have its place. Of course I expect to yield at any moment that the Senator from Texas is present, otherwise I will ask that the reading of my amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts be re-

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota if he would be willing to lay the bill aside in order that the Senate may take up the calendar under Rule VIII, only considering bills to which there is no objection? The Senator from Texas will be here in a very few minutes, and meantime we can go on with those bills.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Upon that I desire to say that the omnibus claims bill has been before the Senate, and, if we are ever to get through with it, I feel that, in accordance with the pledge I have made, it is my duty to urge it at every possible opportunity.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I withdraw the suggestion. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will resume, at the point where it was last left off, the reading of the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAW-FORD] to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge].

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment to the amendment, at the top of page 12, and read to the bottom of page 16.

Mr. BAILEY entered the Chamber.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator from Texas [Mr. Balley] now being in his place, I ask that the further reading of the amendment to the amendment be discontinued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be suspended and the bill laid aside.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I give notice that to-morrow, at the close of the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to continue the consideration of the pending bill.

THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask that Senate resolution 413 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 413) submitted by Mr. Balley December 19, 1912, as follows:

Resolved, That such a system of direct legislation as the initiative and referendum would establish is in conflict with the representative principle on which this Republic was founded, and would, if adopted, inevitably work a radical change in the character and structure of our Government.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, during my service of more than twenty-one years in the two Houses of Congress I have never before delivered an address in either of them intended more for the country at large than for the body itself, and I would not now depart from a rule which I have followed so long and which commends itself so fully to my judgment except for the extraordinary situation in which we find ourselves with respect to the questions embraced in the pending resolution.

For several years the advocates of the initiative and referendum have conducted a campaign in their behalf with an industry and a zeal unparalleled in American politics. They have used the Congressional Record to disseminate their arguments, and not content with the number or the kind of readers whom they could reach through that publication, they have printed what they desired to circulate as separate documents, which they have sent into more than three million homes. They have filled every newspaper and magazine whose columns were open to them with their appeals; and from every lecture platform in the land they have urged those proposals as the true and the only remedy for the industrial and political evils which afflict our age and country.

On the other hand, the men who are opposed to the initiative and referendum have made no special effort to combat them. They have, it is true, protested from time to time with some degree of earnestness, but they have not followed their words with either the work or the organization calculated to achieve results, and in more than one instance they have suffered those cumbersome and illogical legislative methods adopted almost without resistance. An examination of the returns will show that those miscalled "reforms" have been incorporated into the organic law of several States by votes which did not represent twenty-five per cent of the qualified electors in those States, for the simple reason that no adequate attempt was made to instruct the people and bring them to the polls.

This remarkable condition has been due to different influences operating on the minds of different classes. Many of our most intelligent and successful business men are always so engrossed with the management of their private affairs that they often neglect, I regret to say, the performance of their highest duty to the public, and they have not up to this time taken any part in this contest. A still larger, and an equally intelligent, number of our people have treated it all as a transient distemper of the public mind, and expecting that it would soon pass away they have permitted the propaganda to proceed unchallenged. With these numerous and intelligent citizens inactive and apparently indifferent, many ambitious politicians have concluded that by an advocacy of those measures they could win official preferment and accordingly have joined in the noisy demand for their adoption.

Thus, Mr. President, these innovations have acquired a false appearance of strength, and that false appearance of strength has attracted the support of many who do not understand them and who will reverse their positions when they are made to understand them. But, sir, if the men who believe in a written Constitution and in the principles of a representative democracy do not meet this question courageously and discuss it before the people, we will soon reach the time when a discussion can not produce its proper effect. Personally, I have not been delinquent in this matter, for on every suitable occasion I have endeavored to expose, to the best of my ability, the dangers of this new political evangel; and yet, sir, I would feel that I had left something undone, if I did not, before retiring from the Senate, leave upon our record a fuller statement of the argument than I have heretofore found an opportunity to make.

When I drew the resolution to which I am speaking I limited it to the single proposition that the initiative and referendum are repugnant to the principles upon which this Government was founded; and I so limited it because I feared that the business of the Senate would not permit me to occupy more of its time than would be required to establish that proposition. I perfectly understood, of course, that the work which I had thus laid out for myself, no matter how thoroughly I might do it, would dispose of only one-half of the question; and the more I have considered it the more I have become convinced that, even at the risk of unduly taxing the patience of the Senate, I ought to go further and demonstrate also, if I can, that this Government, as established by our fathers, is a better government than that which the initiative and referendum would establish. And to that double task I shall now apply myself.

In the convention which framed our Constitution some delegates believed that a limited monarchy was the best government which the wisdom of men could devise, and the greatest intellect in that memorable body was one of that number; other delegates preferred an aristocracy, and among them were men of exalted character and unselfish patriotism; still other delegates—and I rejoice to say they composed an overwhelming majority—demanded a representative democracy; but among all of those illustrious patriots and statesmen there was not one who seriously contended for a direct democracy. That our fathers deliberately, and after great consideration, chose a representative democracy as the government best calculated to secure the liberties and promote the happiness of the people can be established by such an abundance of historical evidence that my difficulty has been to select from the mass of it sufficient to answer my purpose without unnecessarily consuming the time of the Senate. Fortunately, too, this evidence does not come from any one school of political thought, but men who held the most opposite opinions upon other questions were at perfect agreement on this. Here Hamilton and Madison occupied com-mon ground; here Patterson and Pinckney, each the author of a plan of government, were in full accord; here Monroe and Marshall entertained and expressed the same views.

Mr. President, I realize that it will be extremely irksome for those who do me the honor to hear what I am saying on this occasion to listen to the quotations which I shall read from the letters and speeches of "The Fathers"; and if I were seeking merely to influence the opinion of Senators, I would not feel obliged to subject my audience to that tedious procedure, because I hope that I do not overestimate the esteem in which I am held by my associates when I assume that they would accept my statement of any historical fact without compelling me to support it by quotations. But, sir, I am striving to reach those outside of the Senate Chamber, upon whose intelli-gence and patriotism this Republic must depend for its existence; and as many of them have been misled by the yellow journals into doubting whatever I might say, I feel constrained to read into this record the conclusive evidence that with a full knowledge of the different kinds of government before them, our fathers rejected a monarchy, rejected an aristocracy, re-jected a direct democracy, and wisely chose a representative democracy, which they called a Republic.

THE HISTORICAL EVIDENCE.

I shall first lay before the Senate what Mr. Madison has said upon this subject, and I give this precedence to his testimony because to him, more than to any other man, we owe the Constitution under which we live. It may be that there were delegates in the Philadelphia convention who bore a larger part in drafting the Constitution, or who did more to adjust the differences which at one time threatened to disrupt that convention, though I doubt that; and it may be that there were those who were more potential in securing the ratification of the Constitution after it was submitted to the several States for their action, though I also doubt that. But certainly there was no single man who did more, first in drafting the Constitution and then in securing its ratification, than Mr. Madison, and his opinions upon all matters connected with it have possessed a weight with the American people never accorded to any of his contemporaries. It is true that if Madison lived and taught in this day what he taught through all the years in which he lived, he would be denounced as a Tory and a reactionary, as those of us who still follow his teachings are often denounced; but the most radical Progressives of this time will hesitate to stand before our countrymen and condemn what James Madison has said, for they know as well as I do the deep veneration in which his name is held by the people. Long after our poor voices are silent those who come after us will read and accept what Madison has written and his memory will be cherished as long as this Republic endures. Indeed, sir, if some new folly or madness should seize upon the minds of our people and dissolve the Union which he helped to create, he would still be held in affectionate remembrance as long as civil liberty shall survive in the noble Commonwealth which gave him birth and to whose services he consecrated his talents and the best years of his life.

In the tenth number of the Federalist Mr. Madison discussed this question somewhat elaborately; and after pointing out the dangers which all free governments had encountered, he summed up that phase of the matter in these words:

up that phase of the matter in these words:

But the most common and durable source of factions has been the various and unequal distribution of property. Those who hold and those who are without property have ever formed distinct interests in society. Those who are creditors and those who are debtors fall under a like discrimination. A landed interest, a manufacturing interest, a mercantile interest, a moneyed interest, with many lesser interests, grow up of necessity in civilized nations and divide them into different classes, actuated by different sentiments and views. The regulation of these various and interfering interests forms the principal task of modern legislation and involves the spirit of party and faction in the necessary and ordinary operations of government.

If anything were needed to confirm our confidence in the wisdom of Madison, the passage which I have just read would be sufficient, because it shows that looking with rare foresight through the century which separates our day from his he could see the conflict of class interests which we now witness and which every thoughtful man regards as a menace to the peace of this country, and to the permanence of these insti-Not only was Madison wise enough to understand that this conflict of class interest would come, but he was also wise enough to know that no free government could ever eradicate its causes, and that the most enlightened statesmen could hope to do no more than to control its effects. That this could not be accomplished under a direct democracy, and that it could be accomplished under a republic was his firm conviction expressed in these words:

in these words:

A republic, by which I mean a government in which the scheme of representation takes place, opens a different prospect and promises the cure for which we are seeking. Let us examine the points in which it differs from the pure democracy, and we shall comprehend both the nature of the cure and the efficacy which it must derive from the Union. The two great points of difference between a democracy and a republic are: First, the delegation of the government in the latter to a small number of citizens elected by the rest; * * *.

The effect of the first difference is, on the one hand, to refine and enlarge the public views, by passing them through the medium of a chosen body of citizens, whose wisdom may best discern the true interest of their country and whose patriotism and love of justice will be least likely to sacrifice it to temporary or partial considerations. Under such a regulation it may well happen that the public voice, pronounced by the representatives of the people, will be more consonant to the public good than if pronounced by the people themselves, convened for the purpose.

Not only has Madison in these unequivocal terms expressed himself in favor of a representative democracy, which he called a republic, but in the same paper from which I have just been reading he condemned the ancient democracies as "spectacles of turbulence and contention, incompatible with personal security or the rights of property."

Mr. Madison again discusses the character of the government which it was proposed to establish in the thirty-ninth number of the Federalist, where he propounds and answers the specific question as to what constitutes a republican form of government. It will perhaps better emphasize the expressions upon which I desire to concentrate the special attention of the Senate for me to read what precedes them, and as the entire essay is an interesting one I do not think that Senators would consider it a waste of their time to hear all of it, though I shall only read the part which follows:

The last paper having concluded the observations, which were meant to introduce a candid survey of the plan of government reported by the convention, we now proceed to the execution of that part of our under-

The first question that offers itself is whether the general form and aspect of the Government be strictly republican. It is evident that no other form would be reconcilable with the genius of the people of America, with the fundamental principles of the revolution, or with that honorable determination which animates every votary of freedom to rest all our political experiments on the capacity of mankind for self-government. If the plan of the convention, therefore, be found to depart from the republican character, its advocates must abandon it as no longer defensible.

What, then, are the distinctive characters of the republican form? Were an answer to this question to be sought, not by recurring to principles, but in the application of the terms by political writers to the constitutions of different States, no satisfactory one would ever be found. Holland, in which no particle of the supreme authority is derived from the people, has passed almost universally under the denomination of a republic. The same title has been bestowed on Venice, where absolute power over the great body of the people is exercised in the most absolute manner by a small body of hereditary nobles. Poland, which is a mixture of aristocracy and of monarchy in their worst forms, has been dignified with the same appellation. The Government of England, which has one republican branch only, combined with a hereditary aristocracy and monarchy, has with equal impropriety been frequently placed on the list of republics. These examples, which are nearly as dissimilar to each other as to a genuine republic, show the extreme inaccuracy with which the term has been used in political disquisitions.

If we resort for a criterion to the different principles on which difextreme in quisitions.

quisitions.

If we resort for a criterion to the different principles on which different forms of government are established, we may define a republic to be, or at least may bestow that name on, a government which derives all its powers directly or indirectly from the great body of the people and is administered by persons holding their offices during pleasure for a limited period or during good behavior.

I do not need to tell those who are familiar with his views that Alexander Hamilton was more aggressive than Madison in his opposition to a direct democracy. He did not hesitate to declare that even if it were possible to organize a government which the people would control in their primary capacity and without the intervention of representatives it would not be desirable to do so. Speaking on that point in the New York convention, he declared:

It has been observed by an honorable gentleman that a pure democracy, if it were practicable, would be the most perfect government. Experience has proved that no position in politics is more false than this. The ancient democracies, in which the people themselves deliberated, never possessed one feature of good government. Their very character was tyranny; their figure, deformity.

Speaking on another day to the same convention, and describing the representative principle as the one which distinguishes our system from all others which had gone before it, Hamilton

Mr. Chairman, it has been advanced as a principle that no government but a despotism can exist in a very extensive country. This is a melancholy consideration, indeed. If it were founded on truth, we ought to dismiss the idea of a republican government, even for the State of New York. This idea has been taken from a celebrated writer, who, by being misunderstood, has been the occasion of frequent fallacies in our reasoning on political subjects. But the position has been misapprehended, and its application is entirely false and unwarrantable; it relates only to democracies, where the whole body of the people meet to transact business and where representation is unknown. Such were a number of ancient and some modern independent cities. Men who read without attention have taken these maxims respecting the extent of country and, contrary to their meaning, have applied them to republics in general. This application is wrong in respect to all representative governments.

Although it is generally understood that Madison and Hamil-

Although it is generally understood that Madison and Hamilton deserve the highest credit for the government under which we live, there are many profound students of our history who assign to Charles Pinckney a place above them both. I shall indulge in no comparisons; but I must be permitted to say that the Pinckney draught became the basis of our Constitution, and Madison's great service consisted largely in perfecting it. Nor is it out of place for me to say that Hamilton's well-known preference for a government modeled after that of Great Britain so far diminished his influence among the delegates to that convention that his authority was less than his intellect and patriotism would otherwise have made it. But whether the order should be Madison, Hamilton, and Pinckney, or Madison, Pinckney, and Hamilton, or Pinckney, Madison, and Hamilton does not concern us here, because on the point which we have under discussion they did not differ; and having already laid before the Senate the views of Madison and Hamilton, now desire to read from Pinckney's opening speech to the South Carolina convention:

Carolina convention:

Much difficulty was expected from the extent of country to be governed. All the republics we read of, either in the ancient or modern world, have been extremely limited in territory. We know of none a tenth part so large as the United States; indeed, we are hardly able to determine, from the lights we are furnished with, whether the governments we have heard of under the names of republics really deserved them or whether the ancients ever had any just or proper ideas upon the subject. Of the doctrine of representation, the fundamental of a republic, they certainly were ignorant. If they were in possession of any other safe or practicable principles, they have long since been lost and forgotten to the world. Among the other honors, therefore, that have been reserved for the American Union not the least considerable of them is that of defining a mixed system, by which a people may govern themselves, possessing all the virtues and benefits and avoiding all the dangers and inconveniences of the three simple forms.

To the same effect spoke one of the most gifted men in the

To the same effect spoke one of the most gifted men in the Massachusetts convention. In that great Commonwealth the town meeting had been employed so long as a method of government that its people were perhaps more reluctant than those of any other State to divest themselves of power in order to confer it upon their representatives, and it was to his doubting colleagues that Fisher Ames addressed these wise and imperishable sentences:

Much has been said about the people divesting themselves of power when they delegate it to representatives, and that all representation is to their disadvantage because it is but an image, a copy, fainter and more imperfect than the original, the people, in whom the light of power is primary and unborrowed, which is only reflected by their delegates. I can not agree to either of these opinions. The representation of the people is something more than the people. I know, sir, but one purpose which the people can effect without delegation, and that is to destroy a government. That they can not erect a government is evinced by our being thus assembled on their behalf.

They may destroy but they can not exercise the powers of government in person, but by their servants they govern. They do not renounce their power; they do not sacrifice their rights; they become the true sovereigns of the country when they delegate that power, which they can not use themselves, to their trustees.

In the Connecticut convention sat the governor of that State, Mr. Huntingdon, who delivered the second speech to that body, following Oliver Ellsworth, and these were the sentiments which he declared:

which he declared:

The great secret of preserving liberty is to lodge the supreme power so as to be well supported and not abused. If this could be effected, no nation would ever lose its liberty. The history of man clearly shows that it is dangerous to intrust the supreme power in the hands of one man. The same source of knowledge proves that it is not only inconvenient, but dangerous to liberty, for the people of a large community to attempt to exercise in person the supreme authority. Hence arises the necessity that the people should act by their representatives; but this method, so necessary for civil liberty, is an improvement of modern times. Liberty, however, is not so well secured as it ought to be when the supreme power is lodged in one body of representatives. There ought to be two branches of the legislature that one may be a check upon the other.

In the Pennsylvania convention this same question was discussed by James Wilson, considered by many the ablest man, and considered by all one of the ablest men in that body. Such was his reputation for character, ability, and learning that when Bushrod Washington came to prepare himself for admission to the bar, James Wilson was selected as his instructor, and there is in existence to-day the promissory note which George Washington gave to James Wilson for the tuition of his nephew. Indeed, so highly was Wilson esteemed by the American bar that his appointment as our first Chief Justice was desired by many, and he was called by Washington to serve as one of the first justices of our Supreme Court. These were the views expressed by that learned and upright judge:

One thing is very certain—that the doctrine of representation in government was altogether unknown to the ancients. Now, the knowledge and practice of this doctrine is, in my opinion, essential to every system that can possess the qualities of freedom, wisdom, and energy.

For the American States were reserved the glory and the happiness of diffusing this vital principle throughout the constituent parts of government. Representation is the chain of communication between the people and those to whom they have committed the exercise of the powers of government.

I come now, Mr. President, to the Virginia convention, in which this matter was alluded to more frequently, and seemed to be more generally understood than in any of the other conventions. That may be due to the fact that the Virginia convention contained a larger number of delegates, and it also contained, upon the average, a higher class of men than the other conventions, thus leading inevitably to a more thorough discussion. In some of the conventions there was practically no discussion. In Delaware, New Jersey, and Georgia there was absolutely none, and, so far as its proceedings have been re-ported, none in Maryland. In New Hampshire there were only two short speeches, both on the provision which made it impossible to prohibit the importation of slaves prior to 1808; and in Connecticut the debate consisted of only four speeches, the longest one being that of Oliver Ellsworth, in which he discussed mainly the details of the Constitution, the next longest being that of Gov. Huntingdon, from which I have read, and the other two being very brief speeches by Richard Law and Oliver Wolcott.

But, whatever may be the explanation, the undoubted fact is that the debates in the Virginia convention took a wider range than the debates in any other convention, and there-fore furnish us with the best evidence of the kind of government which our Constitution was intended to establish. One of the first delegates to express himself on this particular point was James Monroe. In repelling the assertion that the lessons of all history made it manifest that a free government could not be established and maintained over an extensive territory, Monroe examined the history of those ancient and modern leagues whose turbulent lives and violent deaths had moved Madison to admonish his countrymen against repeating their mistakes, and he concluded his reply in these words:

Let us see how far these positions are supported by the history of these leagues and how far they apply to us. The Amphictyonic council consisted of three members, Sparta, Thebes, and Athens. What was the construction of these States? Sparta was a monarchy more analogous to the constitution of England than any I have heard of in modern times. Thebes was a democracy, but on different principles from modern democracies. Representation was not known then. This is the acquirement of modern times.

These Governments had failed, according to the argument of Monroe, because the principle of "representation was not known" to them.

In reply to that same objection, John Marshall pointed out that the principle of representation rendered any conclusions based upon the so-called republics of the ancient world inapplicable to our own Government. This was his answer to George Mason .

The extent of the country is urged as another objection, as being too great for a republican government. This objection has been handed from author to author and has been certainly misunderstood and misapplied. To what does it owe its source? To observations and criticisms on governments where representation did not exist.

The honorable gentleman has asked if there be any safety or freedom when we give away the sword and the purse. Shall the people at large hold the sword and the purse without the interposition of their representatives? Can the whole aggregate community act personally? I apprehend that every gentleman will see the impossibility of this. Must they, then, not trust them to others? To whom are they to trust them but to their representatives, who are accountable for their conduct?

Edward Pendleton recorded, for the benefit of posterity, his opinion on this question at-some length and with a definiteness and a clearness which leaves nothing more to be desired. This is what he said:

is what he said:

As a republican, sir, I think that the security of the liberty and happiness of the people, from the highest to the lowest, being the object of government, the people are consequently the fountain of all power.

They must, however, delegate it to agents, because, from their number, dispersed situation, and many other circumstances they can not exercise it in person. They must therefore, by frequent and certain elections, choose representatives to whom they trust it.

Is there any distinction in the exercise of this delegation of power? The man who possesses 25 acres of land has an equal right of voting for a representative with the man who has 25,000 acres. This equality of suffrage secures the people in their property. While we are in pursuit of checks and balances and proper security in the delegation of power we ought never to lose sight of the representative character. By this we preserve the great principle of the primary right of power in the people.

When the hands of our former society were dissolved and we were under the necessity of forming a new government, we established a Constitution founded on the principle of representation, preserving therein frequency of elections and guarding against inequality of suffrage. I am one of those who are pleased with that Constitution because it is built on that foundation.

Mr. President, what I have read from the proceedings of the

Mr. President, what I have read from the proceedings of the Virginia convention includes an expression from every member of that body whose fame has outlived his generation, except Patrick Henry and George Mason, who were opposed to the Constitution and their objections to it would not help us to understand its true intent and meaning. It must not, however, be supposed that because Henry and Mason made no declaration on this particular point that they differed from their colleagues with respect to it, for such is not the fact.

In what was done and said by the smaller delegates to that convention the Senate will feel little interest, and I have not obtruded quotations from them upon it; but there was one of that class whose words I think are worth preserving, and I think that because the speech which he delivered to the Virginia convention was one of the most felicitous made in that or in any of the other State conventions. It was so lofty in thought and so excellent in diction that I am compelled to believe that the only reason we do not know more of him is that his early death or his withdrawal from public affairs deprived the country of his services. His name was Zachariah Johnson, and this is a part of what he said:

Johnson, and this is a part of what he said:

As to the principle of representation, I find it attended to in this Government in the fullest manner. It is founded on absolute equality. When I see the power of electing the representatives—the principal branch—in the people at large, in those very persons who are the constituents of the State legislatures; when I find that the other branch is chosen by the State legislature; that the Executive is eligible in a secondary degree by the people likewise, and that the terms of elections are short and proportionate to the difficulty and magnitude of the objects which they are to act upon; and when, in addition to this, I find that no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either branch, I say, when I review all these things, that I plainly see a security of the liberties of this country to which we may safely trust. Were this Government defective in this fundamental principle of representation, it would be so radical that it would admit of no remedy.

Mr. President I have not laid before the Senate all which the

Mr. President, I have not laid before the Senate all which the fathers said upon this question, because I could not do that without extending this address beyond all reasonable length; but I have laid before the Senate enough to establish, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the wise and patriotic statesmen who dedicated this Republic to liberty and independence rejected a direct democracy in which the people would rule without the intervention of representatives and adopted a representative democracy in which the people should rule through their duly chosen agents. How, sir, can a man in the face of this testimony attempt to controvert that statement? Are there those, sir, who will not recognize the right of the men whose very words I have repeated to describe the nature and structure of this Government? They were its architects and its builders; they drew its plans; they laid its foundations; they reared its splendid superstructure. Ah, sir, they were more than its architects and its builders; they were its prophets and its apostles, and no man can justly deny their right to say what this Government is and its apostles. ernment is and what they intended it to be.

Doubtless some who are unwilling to challenge the wisdom of the fathers will seek to escape the responsibility of differing with them by claiming that I have not correctly interpreted their teachings; and, in order that no man can evade the issue in that way, I will now lay before the Senate extracts which will make it plain that the construction which I have placed upon what was said by them is in exact accordance with the highest authorities and for many years has been universally received as correct by all men who understand the question.

I am sure that some of you, forgetting for the moment your history, have been inclined to suspect that as I have adduced nothing from Jefferson I have not been able to find anything from him to support my contention. But you will instantly dismiss that suspicion when you recall that up to this time I have been offering only what was said by men who made or who ratified the Constitution, and Jefferson took no part either in the Federal convention which formulated, or in the State conventions which ratified the Constitution, because during all of that time he was absent on a foreign mission. But notwith-standing the fact that Jefferson was not at the Federal convention to advise it upon the kind of a government which ought to be established, and was not in this country to inform the people as to the kind of a constitution which had been proposed for their ratification, we are not without the benefit of his opinion on that question.

THE FATHERS INTERPRETED.

The first expression from Mr. Jefferson on this particular point, so far as my reading extends, appears in a letter to M. L'Abbe Arnond. This letter was written within a year after the Constitution of the United States had been adopted and the new Government put into operation. Nothing could be plainer, nothing could be more specific, and nothing could be more conclusive than this statement made by Mr. Jefferson in that letter:

The annexed is a catalogue of all the books I recollect on the subject of juries. With respect to the value of this institution, I must make a general observation. We think in America that it is necessary to introduce the people into every department of government, as far as they are capable of exercising it, and that this is the only way to insure a long-continued and honest administration of its powers.

1. They are not qualified to exercise themselves the executive department, but they are qualified to name the person who shall exercise it. With us, therefore, they choose this officer every four years. 2. They are not qualified to legislate. With us, therefore, they only choose the legislators.

3. They are not qualified to judge questions of law, but they are very capable of judging questions of fact. In the form of juries, therefore, they determine all matters of fact, leaving to the permanent judges to decide the law resulting from those facts.

Twelve years after he had written that letter to Arnond and Twelve years after he had written that letter to Arnond and within 10 months after he entered upon his first presidential term he wrote a letter to the Hon. Amos Marks expressing his satisfaction with an address adopted by the Vermont House of Representatives and transmitted to him by Mr. Marks. Here is a part of the second paragraph of that letter:

With them I join cordially in admiring and revering the Constitution of the United States, the result of the collected wisdom of our country. That wisdom has committed to us the important task of proving by example that a government, if organized in all its parts on the representative principle, unadulterated by the infusion of spurious elements, if founded not in the fears and follies of man, but on his reason, on his sense of right, on the predominance of the social over his dissocial passions, may be so free as to restrain him in no moral right and so firm as to protect him from every moral wrong.

In a letter to Isaac H. Tiffany, dated at Monticello on August 26, 1816, Jefferson again expresses his opinion as to the character of this Government. Tiffany had sent Jefferson a translation of the Politics of Aristotle, and after reviewing the ancient ideas of liberty and government Jefferson continued:

The full experiment of a government democratical, but representative, was and is still reserved for us. The idea (taken, indeed, from the little specimen formerly existing in the English constitution, but now lost) has been carried by us, more or less, into all our legislative and executive departments; but it has not yet, by any of us, been pushed into all the ramifications of the system so far as to leave no authority existing not responsible to the people, whose rights, however, to the exercise and fruits of their own industry can never be protected against the selfishness of rulers not subject to their control at short periods. The introduction of this new principle of representative democracy has rendered useless almost everything written before on the structure of government, and, in a great measure, relieves our regret if the political writings of Aristotle or of any other ancient have been lost or are unfaithfully rendered or explained to us.

These three letters by Mr. Jefferson extend from 1789 to 1816. They cover the most active period of his great career, and they all speak the same political faith.

Mr. President, I have here one of the most celebrated pamphlets in our literature, and it sustains my theory of our Government. This is the second part of Thomas Paine's "Rights of Man." I know the prejudice which exists against Paine on account of the excesses into which he sometimes allowed himself to fall and the religious intolerance which he provoked; but he was a man of the most extraordinary genius, and re-calling his services to a people struggling for freedom, on this day at least I am willing to forget that he was an infidel and remember only that he was a patriot. In his Rights of Man, Thomas Paine describes the American Government as founded upon the representative principle. This is what he wrote:

upon the representative principle. This is what he wrote:

Referring, then, to the original simple democracy, it affords the true data from which government on a large scale can begin. It is incapable of extension, not from its principle but from the inconvenience of its form, and monarchy and aristocracy from their incapacity. Retaining, then, democracy as the ground and rejecting the corrupt systems of monarchy and aristocracy, the representative system naturally presents itself, remedying at once the defects of the simple democracy as to form and the incapacity of the other two with regard to knowledge.

Simple democracy was society governing itself without the use of secondary means. By ingrafting representation upon democracy we arrive at a system of government capable of embracing and confederating all the various interests and every extent of territory and population, and that also with advantages as much superior to hereditary government as the republic of letters is to hereditary literature.

It is on this system that the American Government was founded. It is representation ingrafted upon democracy. It has settled the form by a scale parallel in all cases to the extent of the principle. What Athens was in miniature America will be in magnitude. The one was the wonder of the ancient world; the other is becoming the admiration and model of the present. It is the easiest of all the forms of government to be understood and the most eligible in practice, and excludes at once the ignorance and insecurity of the hereditary mode and the inconvenience of the simple democracy.

With this abundant and, I might well say superabundant, evi-

With this abundant and, I might well say superabundant, evidence before us I could well afford to rest this part of my case; but, sir, I want the Senate now to learn, what many Senators already know, that the greatest commentators on our system have understood it exactly as I am attempting to enforce and to explain it. It will be no disparagement of others for me to say that the first great work which attempted a full exposition of our Constitution was that of Justice Joseph Story, and I now ask the Senate to attend to this passage from the first volume of his Commentaries:

story, and I now ask the Senate to attend to this passage from the first volume of his Commentaries:

In surveying the general structure of the Constitution of the United States we are naturally led to an examination of the fundamental principles on which it is organized for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects disclosed in the preamble. Every government must include within its scope, at least if it is to possess suitable stability and energy, the exercise of the three great powers upon which all governments are supposed to rest, viz, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial powers. The manner and extent in which these powers are to be exercised and the functionaries in whom they are to be vested constitute the great distinctions which are known in the forms of government. In absolute governments the whole executive, legislative, and judicial powers are, at least in their final result, exclusively confined to a single individual; and such a form of government is denominated a despotism, as the whole sovereignty of the state is vested in him. If the same powers are exclusively confided to a few persons, constituting a permanent sovereign council, the government may be appropriately denominated an absolute or despotic aristocracy. If they are exercised by the people at large in their original sovereign assemblies, the government is a pure and absolute democracy. But it is more common to find these powers divided and separately exercised by independent functionaries, the executive power by one department, the legislative by another, and the judicial by a third; and in these cases the government is properly deemed a mixed one; a mixed anistocracy if it is hereditary in several chieftains or families, and a mixed democracy or republic if it is delegated by election and is not hereditary. But in a representative republic all power examents from the people and is exercised by their choice, and never extends beyond the lives of the individual to whom it is entrusted. It may be entrusted for any short

As Judge Story represents the extreme Whig or Federalist theory of our Government, Democrats might not readily accept as sound the views expressed by him, and therefore I will now read an extract from Tucker, who represents the extreme Democratic theory of our Government. To all who will read attentively these extracts from Story and Tucker it will be plain that the most inveterate partisan differences disappear when we reach this question. Tucker's statement is not quite so elaborate as the one which I have just read from Judge Story, but it is quite as definite and quite as satisfactory. Here it is:

Representation is the modern method by which the will of a great multitude may express itself through an elected body of men for deliberation in lawmaking. It is the only practicable way by which a large country can give expression to its will in deliberate legislation. Give suffrage to the people, let lawmaking be in the hands of their representatives, and make the representatives responsible at short periods to the popular judgment and the rights of men will be safe, for they will select only such as will protect their rights and dismiss those who upon trial will not. True representation is a security against wrong and abuse in lawmaking.

Having read from these two text writers, who represent extreme and opposite views of our Government generally, I desire to read from two others who are considered somewhat less partisan.

In his excellent treatise on the "Principles of Constitutional Law " Judge Cooley defines a republican government as follows:

Law" Judge Cooley defines a republican government as follows:

By republican government is understood a government by representatives chosen by the people, and it contrasts on one side with a democracy, in which the people or community as an organized whole wield sovereign powers of government, and on the other with the rule of one man, as king, emperor, czar, or sultan, or with that one class of men, as an aristocracy. In strictness a republican government is by no means inconsistent with monarchial forms, for a king may be merely a hereditary or elective executive, while the powers of legislation are left exclusively to a representative body freely chosen by the people. It is to be observed, however, that it is a republican form of government that is to be guaranteed; and in the light of the undoubted fact that by the Revolution it was expected and intended to throw off monarchial and aristocratic forms, there can be no question but that by a republican form of government was intended a government in which not only would the people's representatives make the laws and their agents administer them, but the people would also, directly or indirectly, choose the executive. the executive.

Black, in his book entitled "Constitutional Law," lays down the distinction between a pure democracy and a republic in these

The system of government in the United States and in the several States is distinguished from a pure democracy in this respect: That the will of the people is made manifest through representatives chosen by them to administer their affairs and make their laws, and who are intrusted with defined and limited powers in that regard, whereas the idea of a democracy, nonrepresentative in character, implies that the laws are made by the entire people acting in a mass meeting or at least by universal and direct vote.

The highest of all courts has given its sanction to what these text writers have taught us. I do not mean that the Supreme Court of the United States has ever said that a system of direct legislation by the people would render a State government unrepublican in form, because that court has wisely, in my judgment, held that question to be a political one and therefore beyond its judicial cognizance; but I do mean that it has defined a republican form of government in language which excludes the idea of direct legislation by the people. In the Duncan case Chief Justice Fuller, delivering the opinion of the

By the Constitution a republican form of government is guaranteed to every State in the Union, and the distinguishing feature of that form is the right of the people to choose their own officers for governmental administration and pass their own laws in virtue of the legislative power reposed in representative bodies whose legitimate acts may be said to be those of the people themselves.

But while this scheme of direct legislation by the people, owing to its purely political nature, has not been, and perhaps never can be, presented to the Supreme Court of the United States in a way to require a decision upon its constitutionality by that tribunal, it can be and it has been presented to many of our State courts for their determination, and the courts which were first called upon to consider it, in almost every instance, condemned it as involving a departure from the fundamental principles of this Government. No clearer statement of the objection to it was ever made by any court than by the Supreme Court of Texas in one of the early cases. That court then consisted of Hemphill, Wheeler, and Lipscomb, than whom no greater lawyers ever adorned the bench of any State in All of their successors have been upright and many of their successors have been wise; but none of their successors have been more upright or wiser than they were. The question as presented to that great court arose out of a local-option law, about which I shall have something more to say before I close; and although the law itself had been repealed before the case reached a decision they held it invalid upon the ground that under our Constitution as it then stood, the legislature had no power to submit that or any other legislative question to a direct vote of the people. Judge Lipscomb, who delivered the opinion of the court, said:

But besides the fact that the Constitution does not provide for such reference to the voters to give validity to the acts of the legislature we regard it as repugnant to the principles of the representative government formed by our Constitution. Under our Constitution the principle of lawmaking is that laws are made by the people not directly, but by and through their chosen representatives. By the act under consideration this principle is subverted, and the law is proposed to be made at last by the popular vote of the people, leading inevitably to what was intended to be avoided—confusion and great popular excitement in the enactment of laws.

Mr. Proceidant I could the confusion and great popular excitement.

Mr. President, I could cite other cases which fully sustain this Texas opinion, but I feel that I have multiplied these authorities beyond every reasonable requirement, and I shall conclude this part of my address by bringing to the attention of the Senate the best definitions of a democracy and a republic ever written or spoken in the history of the world. They come neither from statesman nor judge nor commentator. They are from Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, where, under the word "Republic," I find this definition:

A State in which the sovereign power resides in the whole body of the people and is exercised by representatives elected by them.

Under "Democracy" Webster first defines a direct democracy, such as the initiative and referendum would establish, and follows that with a definition of a representative democracy, which is synonymous with a republic. If he had left us nothing but his definition of a republic to contrast with his definition of a direct democracy, he would have made clear to our minds the difference between the two forms of government; but, with a thoroughness characteristic of all his great labors, he made the matter doubly plain by contrasting the two kinds of "democracy," under this form and in these words:

1. Government by the people; a form of government in which the supreme power is retained and directly exercised by the people.

2. Government by popular representation; a form of government in which the supreme power is retained by the people, but is indirectly exercised through a system of representation and delegated authority periodically renewed; a constitutional representative government; a republic republic.

These definitions of a democracy and a republic seemed so perfect to me that I was curious to know whether they had been improved in the various editions through which Webster's Dictionary has passed, and I concluded to examine that question. I therefore went back to the first edition, which was issued in 1828, where I found substantially the same definitions as those which appear in the last edition. It is true that those definitions have been slightly abbreviated, and to that extent improved, but they have not been improved in any other respect; and in order that those who hear me, as well as those who may do me the honor to read this speech, may be able to make the comparison for themselves, I will read the definitions make the comparison for themselves, I will read the definitions as they are taken from the edition of 1828. Here they are:

Republic: A Commonwealth; a State in which the exercise of the sovereign power is lodged in representatives elected by the people. In modern usage it differs from a democracy or democratic State in which the people exercise the powers of sovereignty in person. Yet the democracies of Greece are often called republics.

Democracy: Government by the people; a form of government in which the supreme power is lodged in the hands of the people collectively, or in which the people exercise the power of legislation. Such was the government of Athens.

Mr. President, I am not vain enough to suppose that anything I have said has produced the slightest impression on the mind of any Senator, but I am sure that what I have read has produced a profound impression on the mind of every Senator. It could not be otherwise. There, sir, is the testimony of the men who helped to frame the Constitution, together with the testiwho helped to frame the Constitution, together with the testimony of the men who helped to ratify it; there is the deliberate conviction, repeatedly declared, of the greatest statesman who ever served as President of this Republic; there are the opinions of eminent text-writers and wise judges, all concurring in the doctrine that this is a representative democracy in which the people govern themselves through agents of their own selection. And with that proposition satisfactorily established I will now attempt to demonstrate that a representative democracy is safer and wiser than the direct democracy which the initiative and referendum would introduce. REPRESENTATIVE DEMOCRACY VS. DIRECT DEMOCRACY.

While the authorities which sustain me in this branch of my argument are numerous and high, they could not, in the nature of things, be so conclusive as they were on the other branch, because that was a question of historical fact, and therefore susceptible of historical proof, while here we must form our own judgment as to the relative merits or demerits of these systems. But it is nevertheless true, in this case, as in all other cases, that the thought bestowed upon the subject by learned men will help to enlighten us.

I shall not detain the Senate by reading in this connection anything from those who framed the Constitution or from those who ratified it, because in choosing a representative democracy as against a direct democracy they gave the world an incontestable proof that they believed the one a better form of government than the other. Neither shall I call the lawyers to testify on this branch of the case. I do not, however, omit to call them out of any deference to the prejudice which now seems to be so rife against them. I have no patience with prejudice, and no cause ever exhibits its weakness or its injustice more clearly than when it feels compelled to attack one of the learned professions in order to promote its success. excuse the lawyers because our inquiry now is not so much what the Constitution is as what it ought to be, and while many lawyers are competent to instruct us on that point I prefer here to consult the men who have studied government as a science.

Among the scholars who sympathized with the aspirations and labors of those who established this Government, but who took no part in its establishment, Noah Webster enjoys a special distinction. Even many well-informed people of this day know Mr. Webster only as a lexicographer, and perhaps a larger number remember him more as the author of a spelling book which we studied as children. But, sir, Noah Webster was more than a lexicographer and more than a mere author of schoolbooks. He was a lawyer of eminent ability and he was a philosopher in more than one department of literature. At the request of a delegate to the Federal convention, Mr. Webster wrote and published a pamphlet in which he stated the basis of majority rule and the basis of representative government with a clearness and a force which has never been surpassed. Indeed, sir, he stated them in such a convincing manner that his statement of them dispenses with any argument upon them. Though the rule of the majority is not involved in this discussion, I shall read what he said upon that for the benefit of those who might find it difficult to secure a copy of the pamphlet which contains it, and also because, as it immediately precedes his comment on the representative principle, it serves in some degree to illuminate that. I hope the Senate will listen

On the first view of men in society we should suppose that no man would be bound by a law to which he had not given his consent. Such would be our first idea of political obligation. But experience, from time immemorial, has proved it to be impossible to unite the opinions of all the members of a community in every case, and hence the doctrine that the opinions of a majority must give law to the whole state, a doctrine as universally received as any intuitive truth.

Another idea that naturally presents itself to our minds on a slight consideration of the subject is that in a perfect government all the members of a society should be present and each give his suffrage in acts of legislation by which he is to be bound. This is impracticable in all large states; and even were it not, it is very questionable whether it would be the best mode of legislation. It was, however, practiced in the free states of antiquity, and was the cause of innumberable evils. To avoid these evils, the moderns have invented the doctrine of representation, which seems to be the perfection of human government.

Foremost among the men of his class in the generation succeeding that of Noah Webster stands Prof. Francis Leiber, of German birth, but long identified with American life and with our higher education. He occupied the chair of political science at the State College of South Carolina for many years, and was afterwards called to the same professorship in Columbia College. Prof. Leiber gave his unqualified approval to a representative democracy, and did not, as some others have done, predicate that approval upon the impracticability of a direct democracy. According to his philosophy, a representative democracy is not only relatively but it is absolutely the best government; and I now invite your attention to what he says on this subject in his celebrated book entitled "Civil Liberty and Self-Government." Here it is:

Subject in his celebrated book entitled "Civil Liberty and Self-Government." Here it is:

Of all the guaranties of liberty there is none more important and none which in its ample and manifold development is more peculiarly Anglican than the representative government. Everyone who possesses a slight acquaintance with history knows that a government by assembled estates was common to all nations arising out of the conquests of the Teutonic race; but the members of the estates were deputies or attorneys sent with specific powers of attorney to remedy specific grievances. They became nowhere, out of England and her colonies, general representatives—that is, representatives for the state at large, and with the general power of legislation. This constitutes one of the most essential differences between the deputative medieval estates and the modern representative legislatures—a government prized by us as one of the highest political blessings and sneered at by the enemies of liberty on the Continent at this moment as "the unwieldy parliamentary government." I have endeavored thoroughly to treat of this important difference; of the fact that the representative is not a substitute for something which would be better were it practicable, but has its own substantive value; of political instruction and mandates to the representatives, and of the duties of the representative in the political ethics, to which I must necessarily refer the reader.

With reference to the great subject of civil liberty and as one of the main guaranties of freedom the representative government has its value as an institution by which public opinion organically passes over into public will that is law; as one of the chief bars against absolutism of the executive on the one and of the masses on the other hand; as the only contrivance by which it is possible to induce at the same time an essentially popular government and the supremacy of the law or the union of liberty and order; as an invaluable high school to feach the handling and the protecti

Although he lived and wrought under a government which was not a representative democracy, one of the most exhaustive disquisitions on representative government came from the pen of John Stuart Mill; and he closes its third chapter with this summary which it would be well to have printed in every textbook on political economy used in the colleges of this land:

From these accumulated considerations it is evident that the only government which can fully satisfy all the exigencies of the social state is one in which the whole people participate; that any participation, even in the smallest public function, is useful; that the participation should everywhere be as great as the general degree of improvement of the community will allow; and that nothing less can be ultimately desirable than the admission of all to a share in the sovereign power of the State. But since all can not in a community exceeding a single small town participate personally in any but some very minor portions of the public business, it follows that the ideal type of a perfect government must be representative.

I have selected Webster, Leiber, and Mill as the best exponents of the political philosophy of their respective generations, but as they did not live in our generation the progressive statesmen of this day will perhaps despise what they have said as obsolete and irrelevant. I shall therefore supplement the quotations which I have made from those illustrious phidistinguished and, without flattery I can add, one of the very ablest men who has written upon governmental science in our day. Even before I mention his name you have anticipated it, and you know that I refer to Prof. Woodrow Wilson, now governor of New Jersey, and soon to become President of the United States. In the course of a series of lectures of the United States. In the course of a series of lectures delivered at Columbia University in 1907, which have been published under the title of "Constitutional Government in the United States," Prof. Wilson said many excellent things about our Government, but he said nothing more excellent than what I am about to read. Indeed, sir, I very greatly doubt if the same thought has ever been better expressed, and I am sure that more wisdom was never compressed into so few and such short sentences.

But before reading this matter, I desire to expressly disclaim any thought of reading it for the purpose of contradicting what Mr. Wilson is reported to have said in a recent political cam-I sincerely hope that there is to be no conflict between the opinions of the philosopher and the practices of the states-I am a Democrat, and though I did not favor Gov. Wilson's nomination by our party, no living man more sincerely hopes for a successful administration of this Government by him than I do. Nor is any man more confident than I am of a successful administration by Gov. Wilson, if he will adhere steadfastly to Democratic principles, turning neither to the right in order to please Republicans nor to the left in order to please Progressives. I know that certain men are working assiduously to impress him with the idea that he is under a great obligation to the Progressives; but his worst enemy could not wish him to commit a more serious blunder than to act upon the assumption that he owes his election to Progressives and not to Democrats.

The Democrats of this country-those who are Democrats without prefixes or affixes-voted for Gov. Wilson almost without exception, and without their votes he would have been the third, instead of the first, man in that race, while many of those who call themselves Progressive Democrats voted against him. This defection of the Progressives was not universal, but it occurred in every close and doubtful State. In the great State of Illinois Gov. Wilson received 43,000 votes less than were cast for our candidate there in 1908, and this does not measure the whole Democratic loss, because there were thousands of Republicans who earnestly desired the reelection of President Taft, but thinking that to be impossible, and thinking that the contest was between Roosevelt and Wilson, they cast their ballots for Gov. Wilson, in order to make the defeat of ex-President Roosevelt certain. In addition to these Republican votes which our candidate received, there were many young men who had reached a voting age since the presidential election four years ago, and it is safe to say that a majority of them voted our ticket. But with those Republicans and those first presidential voters supporting our candidate, he still received 43,000 votes less in the State of Illinois than our candidate received there four years ago, which means that at least 75,000 voters re-neurced their allegiance to the Democratic Party. Where did they go? Not to the Republican Party. No Democrat voted for Taft, though all Democrats respect him as an honest man and a sincere patriot; but those who would have regarded his election with complacency or even with satisfaction did not vote for him, because they knew he could not be elected. Those 75,000 Democratic voters joined the Progressive Party and voted for ex-President Roosevelt. The same thing which happened in Illinois happened even to a larger extent in the State of Ohio, where our party vote at the last election was something like 100,000 less than it was in 1908. Those men are lost to us forever, and more of their kind will follow them, for as long as Theodore Roosevelt lives and leads the Progressive movement neither Gov. Wilson nor any other man, unless it be Eugene V. Debs, can ever successfully compete with him for the discontented and radical vote of this country.

But neither the votes which we have lost to the Progressive Party nor the votes which we may lose to it can seriously imperil our success if Gov. Wilson gives us a safe and a satisfactory administration; for if he does that the Republican Party will never nominate another candidate for the Presidency, the best of it will enlist under our standard, and the contest four years hence will be between the Democratic and the Progressive Parties. I do not expect my Republican friends across the nisle now to concede that under any circumstances their party will not present a candidate at the next election; but if the next administration is as wise as it ought to be the disintegration of the Republican Party is inevitable. With the Democratic Party successfully conducting the Government, and with the people prosperous, the Republican Party could not hope to do as well in the next election as it did in the last one, when it carried only 2 out of the 48 States, and those 2 among the smallest in the Union.

Looking forward to that condition, I would do nothing to embarrass Gov. Wilson; and it is not, therefore, for the purpose of quoting him against himself, but it is in the hope of illuminating this question that I invite you to listen to these words from his book:

A government must have organs; it can not act inorganically—by masses. It must have a law-making body; it can no more make law through its voters than it can make law through its newspapers.

This is much stronger than Webster, it is much stronger than Leiber, it is much stronger than Mill, because it practically declares, in effect, that a government in which the people legislate directly is impossible.

But, Mr. President, I am fortified in my contention by the opinion of one wiser than Webster or Leiber or Mill or Wilson. With a scholarship as ripe as theirs and as thoroughly conversant with all governmental systems as they were, he possessed the further advantage of having borne a conspicuous part in making history rather than in writing it.

As Jefferson's second presidential term was drawing toward its close the Legislature of Vermont adopted an address cordially approving his administration and expressing a desire that he should again become a candidate for the Presidency. To that address Jefferson responded on the 10th of December, 1807, and after expressing his grateful appreciation of its friendly sentiments announced his determination not to allow his name to be proposed again for the office which he had then held for nearly seven years, and which he had administered with signal ability and success. In that response he ascended from the personal and particular case, as was always the habit of his mind, to general principles, and said:

That I should lay down my charge at a proper period is as much a duty as to have borne it faithfully. If some termination of the services of the Chief Magistrate be not fixed by the Constitution or supplied by practice, his office, nominally for years, will, in fact, become for life, and history shows how easily that degenerates into an inheritance. Believing that a representative government, responsible at short periods of election, is that which produces the greatest sum of happiness to mankind, I feel it a duty to do no act which shall essentially impair that principle; and I should unwillingly be the person who, disregarding the sound precedent set by an illustrious predecessor, should furnish the first example of prolongation beyond the second term of office.

"That a representative government, responsible at short periods of election, is that which produces the greatest sum of happiness to mankind" was thus set down as the deliberate conviction of Jefferson. The letter in which this passage occurs must not be confused with the one from which I have read in another connection. That first letter was in reply to an address sent him by the Vermont House of Representatives at the beginning of his first term, and the one from which I have just read was in reply to an address of the Vermont Legislature to him, as I have already said, toward the expiration of his last term. In the first letter he stated what he understood our Government to be, while in this second letter he states what he considers the best form of government.

Under date of July 12, 1816, in a letter to Dr. Samuel Kerchival, who had requested his opinion upon the advisability of calling a constitutional convention to revise and modify the constitution of Virginia, Jefferson reiterates his devotion to a representative government, and even declares a direct democracy impossible in Virginia. This is what he says to one of his most intimate friends who had sought his counsel:

A government is republican in proportion as every member composing it has his equal voice in the direction of its concerns (not, indeed, in person, which would be impracticable beyond the limits of a city or small township, but) by representatives chosen by himself and responsible to him at short periods, and let us bring to the test of this canon every branch of our Constitution.

Mr. President, I suppose that no man will venture to deny that Jefferson thoroughly understood the difference between a direct democracy and a representative democracy. Nor can it be doubted, in the face of what I have already read from his letters, that his deliberate judgment was against a direct democracy and in favor of a representative democracy; but I want to make that still plainer, if possible, and I therefore crave the indulgence of the Senate while I read from a letter which he wrote to the Greek scholar and patriot, M. Coray, in 1823.

This letter was written less than two years before his death, but while his faculties were still unimpaired. Indeed, sir, it is a happy circumstance that the faculties of that great man remained unimpaired to the end, for the years which wasted his body seemed only to invigorate his mind.

Knowing his devotion to liberty throughout the world and valuing him as one of the greatest constructive statesmen of all the ages, this Greek patriot had turned to him for advice concerning the institutions of his own country; and in a letter of unusual length Jefferson prefaced his detailed instruction with this general statement:

The equal rights of man and the happiness of every individual are now acknowledged to be the only legitimate objects of government. Modern times have the signal advantage, too, of having discovered the only device by which these rights can be secured, to wit: Government by the people, acting not in person, but by representatives chosen by themselves; that is to say, by every man of ripe years and sane mind who either contributes by his purse or person to the support of his country. The small and imperfect mixture of representative government in England, impeded as it is by other branches, aristocratical and hereditary, shows yet the power of the representative principle toward improving the condition of man.

A "government by the people, acting not in person, but by representatives," is the kind of a government which Jefferson there recommends to the liberty-loving patriots of Greece, and that is the same government which he had advised his own people in Virginia to establish. Both in his letter to Dr. Kerchival and in his letter to M. Coray Mr. Jefferson not only distinctly recognizes the difference between a representative democracy and a direct democracy, but he takes particular pains to emphasize the fact that a direct democracy is impracticable beyond very narrow limits, and to exclude it from the cordial approval which he gave to a representative democracy.

With this imposing array of sages, philosophers, historians, statesmen, and jurists all asserting with one unbroken voice that a representative democracy is the best government for mankind, and asserting with equal unanimity that a direct democracy is fraught with unspeakable disasters, I do not fear the verdict of the American people when this question is submitted to them after a fair and a full debate. My faith is unwavering that the counsel of Washington and Jefferson, of Hamilton and Madison, of Marshall and Monroe, will prevail. Indeed, sir, when the passions aroused by these appeals to ignorance and prejudice have subsided and the sober second thought has returned to the American people, they will marvel that any considerable number of them could have ever consented to abandon those governmental principles which until recent times they have cherished with an almost religious fervor.

tell us that the doctrines of the fathers were good enough for the time of the fathers, but that we have outgrown them, and this cunning appeal to the pride of an age has flattered many weak-minded men into scoffing at what they irreverently call "the wisdom of the dead." Mr. President, that the growth of a nation may call for the adoption of new policies, and that it may even call for either a lesser or a larger application of old principles, is undoubtedly true, and no man could be more ready to recognize an act upon that truth than I am. But, sir, I utterly deny that the growth of a nation in area or population or wealth can ever alter the fundamental principles of a free government. Policies must change with changed conditions, but principles are as eternal as the stars; they are as immutable as God's law. Will they tell me that we have out-grown that cardinal principle of personal liberty which guarantees that no citizen can be condemned without a trial or tried without a jury? Will they tell me that we have outgrown that other great security of freemen which guarantees to every man the fruits of his own labor by providing that his property shall not be taken, even for the public use, without a just compensation to him?

It is just as foolish to discard one proposition because it is old as it is to reject another because it is new. The men who made our Constitution realized that their great work was not so perfect as to permit no change. Absolutely confident of their patriotism, and reasonably confident of their wisdom, they could still foresee that time might disclose some defects in the Constitution, and therefore they solemnly provided in that instrument for its amendment. Devoutly as I cherish the spirit of it, and faithfully as I strive to live up to the letter of it, I do not hold it in any superstitious reverence. I do not look upon it as the ark of a covenant, which shall provoke the curse of God against all who touch it, and I have twice voted to amend it. But, sir, while I have been willing to amend it, I am not willing to destroy it. That Constitution is definite enough to protect the humblest citizen in his every right, and it is elastic enough to punish the mightiest corporation for its every wrong. Through more than a century's trial it has been sufficient for every emergency. It carried us successfully through three foreign wars; it walked with this Republic like a redeeming spirit through the fiery furnace of a civil war, preserving the Union even against the wrath of the men who would now give their lives in defense of its flag; and when that cruel war was over, it was held aloft by brave and generous men in the North as a shield over the bosom of the bleeding and prostrate South. That Constitution, like a flaming sword, waved back from the gates of our stricken land the merciless adventurers who had come to prey upon our misfortunes. Ah, sir, so long as I remember how that Constitution saved my father and his vanquished comrades from the awful fate of those who surrendered to the armies of the unrestrained democracies of old, I shall cherish and defend it.

If we lay aside all the admonitions and advices which the wise and patriotic of other days have tendered to us and conwise and particle of other days have tendered to us and con-sider this question upon our own reasoning, without regard to what others have said upon it, our minds are conducted to the same conclusion. I do not think that a government in which the people shall either make or execute the laws directly would be feasible, even within a small township or city if that township or city contained a population too great for a convenient meeting of them all at the time and place when and where public questions were to be decided. But whether I am right or wrong about that is not material here, for we are not dis-cussing those petty political subdivisions. Our problem is with the Nation, and if they yield to our argument so far as to say that the initiative and referendum are State remedies and are not proposed for the Nation, then I answer that all that can be said about these processes in the Nation apply with equal force to their operation in the State.

The question with us is whether the people of a given sovereignty—and either State or Nation is the same in this respect—can exercise the legislative power of that sovereignty prudently and wisely without the aid of representatives. I would have the right, inasmuch as I am defending an existing institution, to require those who propose this change to show that it is practicable and that it will be beneficial; but I do not choose to stand upon that technicality of debate. I am willing to waive the rule which I could justly invoke against them and to assume the burden of proving a negative by showing that this change is not practicable and would not be

What is the first and the most indispensable element in wise legislation? It is deliberation, and any legislation proposed or adopted without mature deliberation can only be good by acci-This has heretofore been one of the axioms of American politics and nobody has disputed it. In every legislative assembly in this land, from our city councils to the Senate of the United States, this deliberation has been deemed so necessary that all of the rules under which our public business is transacted looks primarily to that end. If the greatest Senator in this were to introduce a bill to-morrow, it would be ferred to a committee so that it might be considered carefully and perfected by such amendments as the collective wisdom of that committee might deem necessary and proper. That is not only our rule to-day, but that was the rule in what men who delight to praise the past call the "Golden Age" of the American Senate. The wisest Senator of that day was compelled to submit his bill, though drawn with his utmost care, to the scrutiny of a Senate committee. The sole and only reason for that rule is that the minds of several men concentrated upon any subject or any document, exchanging their views not only upon its general purpose, but upon its details and even its phraseology, are absolutely necessary to make the bill do what is desired, and no more than that. Perhaps I ought not to say that is the only reason, because there is another, but so cognate to that as hardly to be distinguishable from it, and that other reason is that when the bill comes before the Senate for consideration in open session Senators will have the benefit not only of an explanation of it by the man who introduced it, but also have the benefit of a report from the committee which has carefully considered it. So deeply embedded in all the thoughts and practices of the American people is this plan of sifting every general proposition, of performing every general act with care and deliberation, that even where the people come together in their primary capacity to consider matters of purely local interest they generally appoint committees to prepare such addresses as they think it expedient to issue.

It is sometimes said that the people, with their excellent common sense, can better judge their own needs and interest than great intellects can. I have lately read several editorials in which the writers have declared that the ability of the Senate is being steadily reduced to what they were pleased to call the level of average intelligence; and have expressed the great-est satisfaction with that change in this body. But, Mr. President, even if legislation does not require great ability and even if the average man would be a better legislator for the country than the man of genius, it still must be true that the average man can not legislate wisely unless he studies the question thoroughly for himself and then exchanges views with the others who are engaged jointly with him in the performance of that highly important duty. It does not matter whether men are great or small, above the average, or below the average, or at the average, they can only legislate wisely for this country and these people by debating with each other every question which they are called upon to decide.

But, Mr. President, instead of endeavoring to enforce this view in my own way and with my own words, I can perhaps convince those who differ with me better by directing their attention to what has been said by another. Many sensible things have been written upon the necessity and the efficacy of debate, but no man has ever set forth its advantage, and even its necessity, more clearly or more forcibly than has been done by the next President of the United States. In his admirable book on "Constitutional Government in the United States," from which I have already quoted, Prof. Wilson goes at length into this subject. He not only stresses the necessity of debate, but he goes further and declares that the only debate which will answer the purpose is a debate face to face, mind to mind, and man to man. He dismisses the suggestion so often made, that the people can learn all they need to know about public questions from the newspapers, by adverting to the well-known fact that, as a rule, each newspaper becomes a partisan on every question and presents only one side of the argument, and to the further fact that many newspapers are controlled by special interests. I do not know whether this last statement is well founded or not. I have been told by gentlemen who have long been connected with the press that there are very few newspapers actually owned and controlled by special interest. One of these gentlemen, however, tells me that it is too true in many cases that the attitude of newspapers is controlled by the counting office, and that the matter of dividends to the stockholders sometimes overrules a consideration of the public interest. All this may or may not be true; I do not know. But I do know that certain indibe true; I do not know. But I do know that certain individuals with political ambitions, personal disappointments, and personal animosities now control many newspapers, and al-though they are loudest in their denunciations of the trusts, they are constantly extending their ownership and control over newspaper properties for the double purpose of terrorizing public men and reaping the larger returns upon the investment which a chain of newspapers is apt to bring. Considerations like these undoubtedly diminish the value of every newspaper discussion of any public question and render them unsafe guides, as Gov. Wilson says in the following dissertation.

guides, as Gov. Wilson says in the following dissertation.

There is discussion and discussion. I suppose that we have come to think debate less necessary in our legislative assemblies than it may once have been, because we have allowed ourselves to fancy that the action of government was sufficiently discussed and nicely enough squared with opinion by the news columns and editorials of our newspapers. But even if the chief newspapers were not owned by special interests; even if their utterances really spoke the general opinion of the communities in which they are printed, as very few of them now do, their discussion of affairs would not be of the kind that is necessary for the maintenance of constitutional government. There are many things to be said about the newspapers which will make this at once evident. For one thing, few men outside the big cittes read more than one newspapers they read more than one side of any question; and they generally decide for themselves beforehand which side that shall be by their choice of a newspaper. But far more important than that is the little recognized fact that no number of separate discussions of a question, no matter how assembled, no matter from how many different points of view, from how many different papers or different sections of the country, constitute such a comparison of views as a responsible representative assembly can institute in its debates.

Discussions which are to lead to action must be combined com-views as a responsible representative assembly can institute in its debates.

Discussions which are to lead to action must be combined, compounded, made up out of many elements, or else out of a few, by a process which can be thorough and trustworthy only when these several elements are, so to say, brought personally face to face, as living, contending forces embodied in men authorized to be the spokesmen of voters and speaking with a constant sense of being held responsible for what they say. Common counsel is not jumbled counsel. There is often common counsel in the committee rooms of the House, but there is never common counsel on the floor of the House itself. It goes without saying that the combined acts of a session are not a product of common counsel. They have been produced by a thousand agencies, not thrashed out by one, and they have not been thrashed out in the presence of the country, but behind closed doors.

It may sound a very subtle matter, but it is in fact intensely practical, and is worth looking into. It is because we do not look into it or understand it, though it lies at the very heart of our whole practice of government, that we sometimes allow ourselves to assume that the "initiative" and the "referendum," now so much talked of and so imperfectly understood, are a more thorough means of getting at public opinion than the processes of our representative assemblies. Many a radical program may get what will seem to be almost general approval if you listen only to those who know that they will not have to handle the perilous matter of action and to those who have merely formed an independent—that is, an isolated—opinion, and have not entered into common counsel; but you will seldom find a deliberative assembly acting half so radically as its several members professed themselves ready to act before they came together into one place and talked the matter over and contrived statutes. It is not that they lose heart or prove unfaithful to the promises made on the stump. They have really for the first time laid their minds alongside other minds of different views, of different experience, of different prepossessions. They have seen the men with whom they differ, face to face, and have come to understand how honestly and with what force of genuine character and disinterested conviction, or with what convincing array of practical arguments, opposite views may be held. They have learned more than any one man could beforehand have known. Common counsel is not aggregate counsel. It is not a sum in addition, counting heads. It is compounded out of many views in actual contact; is a living thing made out of the vital substance of many minds, many personalities, many experiences; and it can be made up only by the vital contacts of actual conference, only in face to face debate, only by word of mouth and the direct clash of mind with mind.

Mr. President I am sure that every Senator who has followed.

Mr. President, I am sure that every Senator who has followed closely the reading of this extended quotation from Prof. Wilson is now ready to concur in my statement, made before it was read, that no clearer presentation of the necessity for debate has ever been made; and after conceding all which his friends claim for his ability, I am still surprised that any man, whose personal experience had not taught him the value of debate, could have written so intelligently about it.

Every man who has practiced law has learned how dangerous it is to go into the court room unprepared on a case, because he knows that a well-equipped adversary will demolish his halfbaked arguments. Every man who has served as a judge upon the bench can easily recall how often the attorney for the plaintiff had made out his case until the attorney for the defendant had pointed out the defects in the argument, or some substantial distinction between the case at bar and the cases which had been cited. But, even more than lawyers and judges, men who have served in legislative assemblies have witnessed how a debate has changed the whole trend of opinion. How often have we gone into our committee rooms confident in the correctness of our position upon some bill pending before that committee, and how completely we have been convinced of our error after hearing all that could be said on both sides. Perhaps that experience has not come to me as often as it has come to others, because a tenacity of opinion is one of the infirmities which those who do not love me often allege against me; but I count it no reflection on my firmness or upon my intelligence to say that I have been compelled, more than once, upon the fuller information furnished by a debate, to modify my opinion. No man can ever be sure of any opinion until he has subjected it to the searching test of an analysis by those who differ with him. It is only after our opinions have been assailed from every side that we can find their weak places, or else find that there are no weak places in them.

Not only would the initiative and referendum result in hasty and inconsiderate legislation through a lack of illuminating debate, but it would destroy also the safeguards afforded by our present system of double legislative chambers; and, in my opinion, that would be a calamity from which our country could never recover. The most enlightened opinion in this country, and the most enlightened opinion in every civilized nation in the world, calls for two houses in every legislative assembly. Manifestly the two legislative chambers are designed to insure a consideration by one house and a reconsideration by the other for every law by which the people are to be bound; and it would be the excess of folly to strike down this arrangement which the wisest statesmen in every country have pronounced one of the most salutory restraints ever devised by any people for the protection of their liberty and happiness.

Another safeguard which would be swept away by this system of direct legislation would be age as a qualification for the lawmaker. At present a minimum age is prescribed for the members of each legislative body, in the just expectation that legislation will be matured by men of reasonable experience and ability. Not only does the Constitution of the United States require that men shall have attained a greater age before they are eligible to the Senate than to the House of Representatives, but the same discrimination exists in almost every State in this Union with respect to the members of the lower and upper houses of their legislatures. But in this new and dangerous legislative assembly, composed of all the people, without any distinction as to age, character, or ability, the rashest youth in Georgia who had attained the age of 21 years would be as much a legislator as the distinguished Senator [Mr. Bacon] who sits His character and his attainments have won for before me. him a third reelection to the Senate—an honor never before bestowed by Georgia on one of her sons—and yet, sir, if laws are to be passed by a direct vote of the people, his neighbor, who might be lowest in character and intellect, would be as much a legislator as he. Is this wise; is this prudent; is this safe? Every man who will put that question to his conscience and his judgment must answer, no.

Another serious objection to a system of direct legislation is that it will culminate in a dissolution of political parties and the division of our people into groups or factions. I am aware, of course, that some who look only at the surface of things would hail that as a consummation devoutly to be wished, because they are constantly lamenting the violence of party spirit. But, sir, we can never correct that evil by substituting factions for parties, because the factional spirit is always incomparably more violent than party spirit. I do not need to appeal to history in proof of that assertion. I do not need to interrogate the philosophers about it, for some very recent political events must have made the truth of it patent to every unbiased mind. Sixteen years ago, when the Democratic Party divided into warring factions, each hated the other worse than the Republican Party, and men who had spent their lives in de-claiming against Republican policies openly and actively solicited their neighbors to vote the Republican ticket. Last year the Republican Party was torn asunder and, as we all know, each faction hated the other worse than its ancient enemy, the Democratic Party. We saw men who had passed their manhood in defending the Republican Party, men who had fought shoulder to shoulder through many campaigns, denouncing each other with a bitterness more intense than that which had riven our party in 1896. No, Mr. President, you can not moderate party spirit in this country by breaking up the great parties into small factions, but you can in that way destroy all responsible party government and turn this Republic over to the management of a minority. The rule of a minority is not the kind of a government which is desirable in any country, and least of all in this country. It is not the kind of a government which any thoughtful statesman would be willing to establish, but it is the kind of a government which must inevitably result from the destruction of our parties and the reign of factions. Senate has witnessed within the last two years the group system in operation, and we have seen the legislation of this body controlled by less than a dozen men, who were in turn largely controlled by one man. With something like 45 regular Republicans and with 42 Democrats less than 10 Progressives have dominated this body upon some of its most important measures. They would first vote with the regular Republicans to defeat our Democratic bill and then force us to join them in passing their own bill, or else defeat all legislation on the subject.

Take the woolen bill for an illustration. The Republican Party was opposed to any revision of the woolen schedule; the Democratic Party earnestly desired a substantial reduction in its duties; and between them stood this small group of progressive Senators, who voted with the regular Republicans against the passage of our bill and then compelled us to vote with them to pass their bill or leave that schedule untouched. That bill as it passed the Senate was opposed by practically every Republican Senator and was supported by the Democrats only because they were forced to pass it or nothing. It did not fairly represent the views of one Senator in every ten. Is this the way to "restore the Government to the people" and execute the will of the majority? I think not.

Political parties, if organized and manipulated merely as a means of working out personal or partisan ends, are, of course, worse than useless; but political parties organized and used as a means of conducting the Government according to certain great principles upon which the members of it agree in the main are instruments of good government the value of which it would be difficult to overestimate. Indeed, sir, it is inconceivable to me that a free government could be administered safely and wisely without political parties, because men of the same mind could not otherwise render their opinions effective in the conduct of the Government. As long as they serve this useful purpose parties are necessary and partisans may be patriots. In that sense Washington was a partisan, and though loved and trusted by all parties he was such a Federalist that Jefferson found it unpleasant to remain in his Cabinet. It was in this sense that Jefferson was a partisan, and I am by no means certain that he did not render his greatest service to his country as the founder and leader of his party. Certain it is that through the leadership of his party he acquired an ascendancy over the minds of men and exercised an influence over political events never equaled by any other man in this country. It is in this sense, I hope, that I am myself a partisan. I am a Democrat purely because I want to preserve the principles of that party and not because I am anxious to elect some man to an office. I believe, too, in party organization, and my record for party loyalty is untarnished. I have never scratched a single name from a Democratic ticket, and my vote has not been given grudgingly to the nominees of my party. But, sir, while I am a partisan, I am not an intellectual slave, and I have always reserved the right to think for myself, and I have always held it to be my duty to vote according to my own judgment on every great question. My first speech in the House of Representatives was made against the rule which clothed the Committee on Rules of that body with such extraordinary powers. That rule was reported by the Democratic leaders and made a party question; but that fact could not convince me that all of the committees of the House should be subjected to the control of a single committee, and I felt obliged by my sense of duty to say so. actly what I predicted would come to pass under that rule did come to pass, and everything I said against it has been fully jus-tified. If I thought my party were about to make a mistake like that to-day, I would make my last speech against it just as readily as I made my first. But, sir, while exercising a liberty of thought and speech, which no self-respecting and patriotic man will ever surrender, I am a firm believer in the value of party organization, and I can support no policy which, in my judgment, is certain to eventuate in the decoy of political parties. If we do not follow parties we will follow persons, and when we have walked in that course long enough the man on horseback will come and a military despotism rises upon the ruins of a free

WE TRUST THE PEOPLE.

When I plead for the government of our fathers and for those wise arrangements which have preserved our liberties and independence; when I warn my countrymen against experiments which have been tried in many lands and which have failed in every land where they have been tried, these progressive statesmen call me a reactionary and say that I do not trust the people. Sir, I trust the people more than they do, for I believe that they are intelligent enough to choose capable and honest men to represent them. I would trust with implicit confidence the American people to do anything which they will take the time to do as it ought to be done, but I would not trust them with a work which involves their liberty and their happiness, unless they will prepare for that work in a manner commensurate with its importance.

I would not be guided by any man on any question unless I knew that he had studied that question; and even then I would know that after the most thorough study the wisest will sometimes make mistakes. What is true of each man individually must be true of all men collectively, and as I would not follow with unquestioning confidence the greatest intellect and the loftiest character among us until I was assured that he was familiar with the subject on which he sought to lead me, neither will I follow all the people until I am sure that they can find time to bestow on every question the study necessary to understand it.

If you charge that I do not trust the people, because I say that they are not qualified to legislate for themselves, then you must prefer that same indictment against Thomas Jefferson, because in his letter to Arnond he declares flatly and without any qualifications that-

They are not qualified to legislate. With us, therefore, they only choose the legislators.

No man in his day, and no man since his day, confided more absolutely in the capacity of the people for self-government than Thomas Jefferson, and he did not mean to impeach either their intelligence or natriotism when he declared that they are not qualified to legislate. He simply recognized, as I do, that legislation for a great country and a free people requires a study which the occupations of the people will never allow them to bestow upon it. If you tell me that what Jefferson said might have been entirely right in his day, but entirely wrong in this day, my answer is that every man who knows the conditions which existed then and the conditions which now exist understands that the people of that day were better qualified to legislate than the people of this day. That is true, in the first place, because there was much less legislation then than now, and all legislation was much simpler; and it is true, in the Thomas Jefferson, and he did not mean to impeach either their and all legislation was much simpler; and it is true, in the second place, because the average intelligence of the people who were then permitted to vote was greater than it is to-day. When Jefferson wrote that letter our country was not menaced by the mass of black ignorance, which the fifteenth amendment injected into our body politic, or by an enormous immigration of men wholly incapable of understanding our institutions.

Mr. President, it does not reflect upon the intelligence of any man to say that he is not competent to do a work to which he has not given any special attention. Nobody thinks that it impeaches a lawyer's ability to say that he can not practice medicine. When one of my family falls sick I call a doctor, and I do not consider that I thus acknowledge that he has more ones. Sir, I have seen my older boy wavering between life and death, and by his bedside I sat through the long watches of the night, suffering an agony greater than his, but not once did I venture to countermand the physician's orders. Did I thus imply the superior ability of the doctor or his greater interest in my boy? No, sir; I simply acknowledged that it was safer to follow the directions of a man who had studied medicine than it was to have those directions varied by the father, who had studied law. We will not permit a man to manage a bank or to superintend a farm or to conduct a mercantile enterprise without some previous experience, reenforced by a constant and personal attention to the business. The best engineer on a railroad seldom has more sense than the president or the general attorney of that road, but I ride without any thought that I am incurring a risk upon a railroad train drawn by an engine at whose throttle stands a sturdy and experienced engineer, while I would not ride between the stations nearest to each other on that same train if its engine were driven by the president or the general attorney of that same road.

In every relation of life we recognize the necessity of experience and of a diligence in every matter according to its importance. We will not employ a man to do any work for us in our individual capacity unless he has served some sort of apprenticeship, or at least is willing to give some time and thought to it, and yet, sir, we commit the grotesque absurdity of pretending to think that the greatest of all work, the legislation of a free people, can be wisely done without previous experience and without diligent attention to it. It is a crime against the memory of our fathers, and it is a greater crime against the safety of our children, to flatter the people with an assurance that they can legislate wisely without applying themselves to a thorough study of the measures upon which they must vote.

When these gentlemen who call themselves progressives say that they believe in the rule of the people, they say no more than has been said by all public men, with rare exceptions, throughout our history, unless they intend that hereafter a significance shall attach to that expression different from that which has attached to it heretofore. I believe as sincerely as any man in the rule of the people, but I believe in the rule of the people under our written Constitution and according to the principles of this Republic. Is that the creed of our progressive friends? If so, then there is nothing either new or dangerous in it; but neither does it give them any special claim upon the confidence and support of the people. If those gentlemen disaconnidence and support of the people. If those gentlemen disagree with me, and with those who think as I do on this question, it must be because they desire to establish the rule of the people in some way not sanctioned by the Constitution or the principles of a representative democracy; and that is precisely what they aim to do. They are seeking to work a radical change in the character and structure of this Government. Many of their followers do not believe that, but the candid leaders of the movement admit it, and declare that while they propose to change the character of the Government they expect to make it better. They have shown themselves politicians of consummate skill in selecting as their battle cry "The rule of the people," because that finds universal acceptance in this country as an abstract proposition, but in its actual application it is subject to many exceptions.

There is not a Senator from a Southern State who will not declare that he believes in the rule of the people, and yet they must permit me to say that they believe in that rule with several very important qualifications. They do not believe in the rule of all the people, because no Southern State has yet granted the franchise to women, and I sincerely hope they never will. I can not comprehend how any woman can desire to reduce the difference between her and a man, because the closer she is brought to him, outside of the family relation, the less he will respect her. I can not understand how any woman can voluntarily step down from the pedestal upon which the chivalric men of this country have placed her to mingle in the strife and broils of a political campaign. It may be that the women would help our politics for a time, but our politics would hurt women for all time, and, reacting upon the home, would poison the very fountains of true progress and civilization. long as we deny the franchise to women we can not consistently declare our belief in the absolute rule of the people, for women are people, and the very best people, though not the kind of people to engage in the responsible work of declaring wars or in the rough work of fighting them.

In the Southern States we not only exclude women from all participation in our government and thus reduce the formula to sense than I have, or that he is more interested in restoring the sick member of my family to health than I am. I send for him because he has devoted himself to the study of medicine, and therefore into his keeping I commit the very lives of my loved ments designed to exclude a large number of men from all participation in the government; and consequently the formula, according to the theory and practice of the Southern States, must read that they are in favor of the rule of the white men In California they are willing for white men and black men, white women and black women to rule, but they are not willing for yellow men and yellow women to rule. There is not a State in this Union to-day which will permit convicts or idiots to vote, and yet convicts and idiots are people, but the crime of the one and the affliction of the other have long been regarded as a sufficient reason for withholding from them the right of as a sufferent reason for withholding from the suffrage. The truth is, Mr. President, that when we analyze this matter we see that what passes amongst us to-day as a sign of devotion to the people is nothing more than shallow thinking or unadulterated hypocrisy. I believe in the rule of the people, but I do not believe that vice and ignorance should govern this country. I believe in the rule of those who possess intelligence and virtue, because I know that they alone can save this Republic.

Unable to answer the argument in favor of a representative democracy, our opponents, or at least some of them, disavow any desire or intention to subvert it and insist that they propose the initiative and referendum merely as a means of preserving the representative principle. I seldom allow myself to suspect the intellectual integrity of my opponents, because, in a public career covering almost a quarter of a century, I have found that men are generally honest in their political opinions. Of course, I know that public men are not always governed by a sense of deep conviction in espousing popular measures; but the vice even in such cases is rather a want of knowledge than a want of integrity. If a man does not understand a question, he can not possibly know which is the right side of it, and without knowing the right side he can hardly be censured for taking the popular side. But liberal as I am toward those who differ with me, it is extremely difficult for me to understand how any man can really believe that the representative principle can be preserved by superseding it; and certainly the initiative and referendum do supersede it so far as they may be adopted and applied. Not until two bodies can occupy the same space will it be possible for a representative democracy and a direct democracy to exist side by side under the same government. A direct democracy is as different from a representative democracy on the one side as an aristocracy is different from a representative democracy on the other side; and it is an elementary of political science that no government can be successfully conducted upon principles which run in opposite directions. Prof. Wilson recognizes the truth of that proposition in this book, from which I ask permission again to read:

There are many evidences that we are losing confidence in our State legislatures, and yet it is evident that it is through them that we attempt all the more intimate measures of self-government. To lose faith in them is to lose faith in our very system of government, and that is a very serious matter. It is this loss of confidence in our local legislatures that has led our people to give so much heed to the radical suggestions of change made by those who advocate the use of the initiative and the referendum in our processes of legislation, the virtual abandonment of the representative principle, and the attempt to put into the hands of the voters themselves the power to initiate and negative laws—in order to enable them to do for themselves what they have not been able to get satisfactorily done through the representatives they have hitherto chosen to act for them.

That the initiative and referendum involves "the virtual abandonment of the representative principle" is not only recognized by Gov. Wilson in the extract which I have just read, but the conflict between the two has been recognized and asserted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Bourne], and surely his opinion can not be lightly brushed aside, because he enjoys the doubtful honor of being one of the leaders of this crusade. He understands the question as well as any of his associates, and I cheerfully do him the justice to say that he is as sincere and as patriotic in his views as I am in mine. Within the last two years he delivered a speech in the Senate which has perhaps been given a wider circulation than any speech ever delivered by any Member of this or the other House. I understand that more than 5,000,000 copies of it were printed and distributed, and I have been told that 5,000 copies of it were placed by one Socialist club in Texas. That speech was considered such an authoritative statement of the progressive position that it was printed by unanimous consent of the Senate as a public document, and on the title page of it stands the sloran "Popular as Delegated Consents of the sloran popular as Delegated Consents of the progressive statement of the progressive search progressive statement of the progressive search progressive statement of the progressive search progressive Popular vs. Delegated Government." That carries with it no suggestion that the initiative and referendum are to be employed as mere aids to the representative principle, but it boldly proclaims the conflict between them, and that conflict will not end until the one shall have triumphed over the other. My intellectual vision does not enable me to penetrate the future, and I shall not attempt to prophesy which shall perish and which shall survive; but I am authorized by the history of the past to say that if the representative principle falls this Republic must fall with it.

The development of the initiative and referendum has a curious history in this country, and it is not traceable to any respect which the politicians have entertained for the will or the wisdom of the people. The initiative, of course, has grown out of the referendum, and the origin of the referendum is really the interesting part of the story. So far from it being true that questions were first referred to a direct vote of the people out of any deference to their will or eagerness to serve their interest the real truth is that the practice grew out of the cowardice of politicians, and when you consider the questions which were first dealt with in that manner you can not doubt the correctness of what I say. It must, however, be said to the credit of the politicians of those days that they did not insult the intelligence of their constituents by indulging in the cant which is now so prevalent. The chief subjects of the referendum in the early stages of its development were the questions which gave the politicians most trouble, such as the location of capitals, county seats, and the liquor traffic.

Every man who has lived in a new State knows the intense bitterness and the absorbing interest which the location of a capital always excites; and the same is true even in a greater degree with respect to the courthouse towns of counties. not at all uncommon for contests of this latter kind to result in public disorder and bloodshed. And yet, Mr. President, we can scarcely imagine a question which less concerns the happiness of the people, the security of their liberties, or the permanence of their government. Whether the capital shall be located at one place or another, or whether the courthouse shall be located at Johnstown or at Jamestown may deeply affect the prosperity of the one or the other locality, and may affect the convenience or inconvenience of a larger or smaller number of people; but no question of that kind can ever advance or retard the general prosperity or involve any principle of good government. Questions of that kind, however, do very seriously involve the future of the politicians called upon to decide them, and with a cunning which has brought reproach upon their class they promptly transferred the settlement of those questions to the people.

In adopting the local-option method of dealing with the liquor question the politicians builded better than they knew, because the difficulty of enforcing a prohibition law in a community where the sentiment favors the sale of liquor renders it especially wise to take the sense of the people on that question; and a close comparison of all the methods of dealing with the liquor traffic convinces me that the local-option method is the best. after all, whether liquor shall be sold or its sale prohibited, is a mere matter of police regulation-an important one, I grant you, vitally affecting, in many cases, the peace and the good order of communities—but it is still a question of police regulation, and I have never been able to comprehend how sensible men could become so excited over it as to subordinate all other questions to it. But, sir, while I can not comprehend how this can be true, I know perfectly well that it is true; and when the politicians learned that more than a half century ago they sought to relieve themselves by submitting the question to a vote of the people. But the politicians of that time, while seeking an escape from a responsibility which they were afraid to meet, did not really propose a radical change in our system of government, for, after all, the questions which they submitted through a referendum did not require the people to engage in legislation, as that term is properly understood. They did no more than to say that in particular cases the people, acting under a law already passed by the legislature, should really determine a fact. IS REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT A FAILURE?

And now, Mr. President, upon what ground are we asked to abandon the very basic principle of this Republic? It is neither more nor less than that representative government has proved a failure. It is true, sir, they do not employ that exact phraseology, because these progressive statesmen shrink from presenting the issue in that naked form to the people, and the most they now venture to say is that under selfish and sinister influences, which some of these very progressives helped to set in motion, representative government is breaking down. Is that true? It is exactly the opposite of the truth, for there has never been an hour since Washington took the oath as our first President when the representatives of the people were so responsive to the will of the people as they are to-day, and if there be any ground for criticism it is that these representatives are so eager to execute the will of their constituents that they too often act without waiting to learn the mature and deliberate judgment of the people.

Of course if it can be proved that a people as intelligent as ours and with a suffrage as broad as that which they enjoy can not secure the services of men who are faithful to their interest and obedient to their will, then we must confess before the world that this Government, as it was founded by our fathers, has failed; but we can not rescue it from failure by converting it into a direct democracy, and we might as well admit that it furnishes another melancholy proof of man's incapacity for self-government. If our people lack the intelligence to select wise and honest men to make their laws, or if they are too negligent to make such a choice, we can not reasonably expect that they will perform with greater intelligence or with better diligence the more difficult and perplexing duty of making laws for themselves. If the people will not discharge the simple duty imposed upon them by our present system, it is absurd to suppose that they will discharge additional duties of greater delicacy and complexity. Judging human nature by what little I know about it, I would say that we can not compel the people to take more interest in their elections by increasing the frequency of those elections, and we will greatly aggravate their difficulties if, in addition to the more frequent elections, we add the enactment of measures to the selection of men.

Happily we are not without some light to guide us in forming an opinion on this question; and that light does not come from the musty pages of the Federal Convention; from events so recent that even a Progressive will hardly refuse to follow where it leads. I have here the book of Prof. Dodd on "The Revision and Amendment of State Constitutions," and it contains an appendix giving the popular vote on constitutional amendments in the several States since 1900. The whole table is full of instructive interest, and conclusively proves the aversion of the American people to direct legisla-In seeking to extract its lesson from this table, I will begin with my own State, because I can comment freely upon what our people have done. The first Texas vote which it re-cords was on November 6, 1900, the day on which our general election for that year was held. The total vote for candidates at that election was 449,339, while the total vote on that constitutional amendment was only 240,098, which means that less than 54 per cent of the men who went to the polling places and cast their ballots for the candidates voted on the constitutional amendment. But even that does not tell the whole story, because owing to the great disparity in the strength of political parties in our State we seldom have a contest spirited enough to bring out a full vote; and, therefore, the 240,098 men who voted on that amendment represented less than 35 per cent of those who were entitled to vote.

The next amendment to our constitution provided for the payment of a poll tax, and more than 99 per cent of those who voted for the candidates at that election voted on that constitutional amendment. That is a percentage unprecedented in our State, and, I believe, unprecedented in any other State. The explanation of that remarkable vote is that it involved the prohibition question. The Prohibitionists were striving to secure the adoption of the amendment, because they believed that many of those who regularly voted against prohibition would not pay the poll tax; and the anti-Prohibitionists, taking the same view of the matter, sought to defeat the amendment because they believed that its adoption would seriously affect all future prohibition elections; but, notwithstanding the excitement of a question like that, only 309,150 electors participated in that election. I have already stated that the lack of party contest greatly reduces our vote, but here was a contest over a question which provokes an intensity of feeling such as no other question ever arouses, and yet, under that stimulus, less than one-half of our qualified voters took interest enough in it to cast a vote upon it. With this peculiar question settled the normal public interest in constitutional amendments again exhibits itself, and on the 15 amendments to our constitution which have been submitted in the last 10 years the vote has never risen above 61 per cent, and has fallen as low as 43 per cent, of the total vote cast for candidates, which itself represented, upon an average, only half of the electorate. Upon 9 of the last 15 amendments the total vote cast both for them and against them aggregated less than 100,000 out of more than 600,000 qualified electors.

Utah is next on this list, and 29, 43, 42, 35, and down as low as 23 per cent was the average in that State.

Virginia comes next, and her average on three amendments was 52 per cent, 11 per cent, and 10 per cent.

If any State in this Union ought to make a good showing in this respect it should be Wisconsin; but her votes, as set forth by Prof. Dodd, were only 35 per cent, 29 per cent, 29 per cent, 24 per cent, 27 per cent, 25 per cent, 27 per cent, and 36 per cent. On eight constitutional amendments the percentage in the great State of Wisconsin has ranged from 36 down to 24.

Nothing could better illustrate the impossibility of inducing the voters of this country to settle questions of a legislative or a constitutional character by their direct votes than the history of the very questions upon which I am now addressing the Senate. In 1904 the State of Missouri rejected a constitutional amendment providing for the initiative and referendum by a vote of 115,741 for it to a vote of 169,281 against it, making a total of 285,022 votes cast on that question, while the total vote cast for candidates at the same election aggregated 643,969. With a tenacity and an energy which I regret to say their opponents do not emulate the advocates of the initiative and referendum procured the submission of a second constitutional amendment providing for the initiative and referendum in 1908, and it was then adopted by a vote of 177,615, against 147,290, making a total of 324,905 votes out of a total cast for candidates at the same election of 715,618.

During the year just closed the people of Ohio voted upon an initiative and referendum amendment to their constitution. Had that amendment been submitted alone, we could better understand the small vote which was cast, but 40 other amendments to the constitution of that State were submitted with this initiative and referendum amendment. The State was can-vassed from one end to the other by politicians of high and low degree, practically all of them declaiming with vehemence against faithless representatives and demanding that "the government should be restored to the people." According to my information, a thousand speeches were made in favor of the initiative and referendum, while less than 100 were made against it. When the vote was counted it was found that in round numbers 275,000 had voted for that amendment, while 225,000 had voted against it. Stated in that way and looking no further into the matter, the majority would seem decisive enough, and the vote itself seems reasonably large; but, sir, when we remember that Ohio cast more than 1,100,000 at the preceding presidential election we know that the 500,000 who voted both ways on that constitutional amendment were less than one-half of those who were entitled to vote on it, and about one-half of those who within 60 days afterwards went to the polls and voted upon the election of candidates. Had the other 600,000 voters gone to the polls that constitutional amendment would have been defeated by an overwhelming majority, for it is certain that among the absentees there were no advocates of these modern isms. The men who believe in converting this Republic into a direct democracy never remain away from the polls when there is an opportunity to advance their cause; and the plain moral of all this is that a system of direct legislation tends to reduce this Government to the control of active and radical

If it be true, as I am sure it is, that our representative system works more perfectly to-day than it ever worked before in our history, what has created the distrust which, I regret to say, now so largely pervades the minds of our people? My own opinion is that it is due largely, if not entirely, to a certain class of newspapers and magazines, and I do not think that in the beginning they expected or intended to seriously disturb public confidence in our Government. Years ago, as a kind of light and idle gossip, the reporters began to print a list of senatorial millionaries, and describe the Senate as a rich man's club. Unfortunately the public seemed to relish gossip of that kind, and the scribes forwith increased the length of that list as well as the frequency of its publication. They were not always scrupulous about its accuracy, and many Senators of modest fortunes were set down as millionaires. I remember well a Senator who sat next to me for years-one of the gentlest, bravest, truest men I ever knew—and seeing his name included amongst the millionaires of the Senate one day I congratulated him upon having a bond against poverty in his old age, expressing at the same time the hope that he had not been so badly misplaced as I had, for I was also included in that list. He turned to me, and with a candor which won for him the respect and affection of all who knew him, said that at no time in his life was he ever worth as much as $150,000, and that was before he came to the Senate. He further said that if his property were reduced to cash that hour, and his debts all paid, he would not have $25,000 left, and yet he was advertised to this country and to the world as a senatorial millionaire.

From this habit of exaggerating the wealth of Senators these same gossipers passed by easy stages to insinuations that many of them had acquired their wealth while in the public service. I remember a Senator, of long and useful service in this Chamber, who was accused for years of having accumulated his millions in politics, and though he was a Democrat of unswerving party fidelity that accusation was often printed in Democratic newspapers. I had read it so many times before I was elected to the House of Representatives that I accepted it as true. In fact, it never occurred to me to doubt it, and I came to Washington with a prejudice against him. It was afterwards my privilege to know him well, and to learn that instead of growing rich out of the public service he had spent more in helping to maintain the organization of his party than he had saved. The partners with whom he had engaged in certain legitimate business enterprises had made and paid over to him as his share of their profits more than three times as much money as he was worth when he died. These are examples which I could easily multiply, but they sufficiently indicate the heedlessness of such

Having falsely assumed that men had made great fortunes while serving in the Senate, it was easy to insinuate into the public mind a suspicion against their integrity. To ask if a man could make millions honestly in the public service, of course admitted of but one answer; but the question assumed a lie, and therefore required no answer. Senators were too proud to file an inventory of their possessions with the newspapers, and they submitted in silence to those imputations upon their

Emboldened by the refusal to deny their charges and encouraged by the avidity with which the public received and read them, those newspapers proceeded to instill their poison into the public mind in a bolder fashion. Mr. President, I do not want what I am saying to be misunderstood. I do not mean that all newspapers were guilty of this infamous practice. Many of them were not, but I grieve to say that those which were seemed to prosper more than those which were not. Avaricious owners were swift to learn, what I blush for my countrymen to say is true, that assaults on public men secure many readers, while eulogies bring none. If one of the Washington papers would announce in to-morrow's issue that on next Sunday it would recount the virtues and the services of a certain Senator, that announcement would not sell two hundred extra copies of that paper; but if that same paper were to announce that next Sunday morning it would expose the immoralities, the debaucheries, and the corruptions of that same Senator, the extra demand would exceed 5,000 copies. Let us hope that this will not always be true. Let us hope that the time will come when the truth will outsell falsehood, and when groundless libels will reduce a paper's circulation as certainly as they now reduce its Once having learned that sensational attacks, though utterly destitute of the truth, would be eagerly read by the public, unscrupulous editors and owners found that they could gratify their spite and increase their incomes by assailing public men whom they happened to dislike, for personal or political reasons; and the carnival of slander was deliberately inaugurated. I do not know, and therefore I am not willing to say, how far they counted the consequences; but they ought to have understood that they could not destroy the confidence of the people in their representatives without also destroying the confidence of the people in our system of representative government. Doubtless when some of those men began to realize that, they would have turned back except for the fear that they would thus draw the fire from both sides. Others, however, welcomed the state of mind which they had, perhaps unwittingly, helped to produce as offering them a still better opportunity to reach a bad eminence; and knowing that the ignorant prejudices to which they were appealing would tolerate no moderation, they entered upon a systematic effort to still further dissatisfy the people with their government by assailing the patriotism and integrity of every man who had the character and the courage to oppose their selfish and diabolical schemes. They have done me the honor to single me out as the object of their fiercest attacks, and have slandered me with more malevolence and less reason than any man in public life. They hate me because I entreat the people to hold fast to the safeguards of a written Constitution; and because I believe in an orderly government which shall protect the life, the liberty, and the property of every citizen they denounce me as a "corporation lawyer." They have not, of course, attempted to show wherein I have served the corporations against the people, because mendacity and malice combined could not do that. There is my record, sir: it covers more than 21 years. During that time I have participated in every great debate, and I have voted on every important measure, but they can not find where I have ever spoken or voted against the honor or the interest of the people whose commission I have held. They have charged me with practicing law, but the most reckless of them do not claim that I have been employed in any case which could affect legisla-tion or which could be affected by legislation.

I have here a sample of these attacks, in a magazine owned and published by one William R. Hearst, who affronts the decency of this Nation by posing as an apostle of civic righteous-Politics with him are a trade and patriotism a pretense; he delights in assassinating the character of honest men and revels in the slime of the gutters. Without conscience, fidelity, or courage he is a moral pervert and political degenerate and a physical coward.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from exas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. I would be false to friendship-

Mr. BAILEY. If you want to reply for him, you must do so outside; you can not interrupt me for that purpose here. Mr. ASHURST. I will when you get through, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. BAILEY. The one article in this magazine which has perhaps been read more widely than all of the others is an attack upon Members in both Houses of Congress, who are charged with subservience to the Standard Oil Company. That article consists almost entirely of certain letters written by Mr. J. D. Archbold, or written to him, and the comments of the author upon those letters. The obvious purpose of the publication is to impress the people of this country with a belief that their representatives instead of serving them are serving the great corporations. Among the letters which appear in this magazine is one which purports to have been written by the Hon. J. C. Sibley, of Pennsylvania, to Mr. Archbold, in which he refers to "Mr. B., a Democrat," and whom he identifies further on as a Member of this body. The author of this article assumes that I was the Mr. B. referred to by Mr. Sibley, and proceeds to assail me as one of the Standard Oil Senators, seemingly oblivious to the fact that the very letter on which he based his charge completely refuted it.

On one page he classified me as a Standard Oil Senator and on another page prints a letter which shows that, within the knowledge of the man who wrote it, I had little or no acquaintance with Mr. Archbold, the manager of that corporation. This would seem to convict the man who wrote this article of a stupidity almost sufficient to excuse him for lying; but we must not leap to the conclusion that he is so stupid as his screed makes him appear to sensible men. The letters which he was publishing had been stolen, and he was shrewd enough to know that the readers whose prejudices he was striving to inflame would consider it a matter of suspicion that a man's name was mentioned at all in a stolen letter. When I was a boy at the law school I was taught that the man who received stolen property, knowing that it had been stolen, was as guilty as the thief himself, and that is just as true in morals as it is in law. Up to within these last few years any man who would have hired thieves to rifle the letter books and letter files of his employer would have been ostracized from the association of honest men, and he could not have found an audience in America which would have heard him publicly proclaim his lufamy. But the times are different now, and if a man will pretend to be a reformer the people seem to forgive all his misconduct and applaud his thefts if they can be used against the reactiona-

Mr. President, there is something wrong about this letter, for if the date of it is correct the Mr. B. to whom it refers as a Member of the Senate could not have been me, because the letter is dated February 26, 1900, and I was not then a Senator. I was not elected to the Senate until January, 1901, and took my seat as a member of this body on the 4th of March, 1901. But, sir, even if I was the Mr. B. to whom that letter referred, it imputes to me no act or opinion which could reflect on me in the slightest degree either as a Senator or as a man. It represents me as opposed to the then administration's corporation policy and states that I was prepared to "make a great fight" against the right of the Government to open a man's books for the purpose of ascertaining the profits of his business. I do not recall that I ever discussed that question with Mr. Sibley one way or the other, but I have never hesitated to express my position substantially as it is there stated to everyone with whom I have talked on that subject. I was then, and I am now, unalterably opposed to the Rooseveltian policy of legalizing monopolies and then attempting to control them, I believe that monopolies ought to be treated as commercial outlaws and punished with severity enough to exterminate them; but I am not such a fool as to think, or such a demagogue as to pretend that I think that every successful enterprise is a monopoly, nor do I think that any man should be condemned either by law or public opinion simply because he has managed his business with such sagacity as to make it a large and prosperous one. I have no prejudice against any business because of its size until it reaches a size which renders it a monopoly, and then I think that the law ought to lay its hand upon it with crushing weight. The other statement that I deny the right of the Government to search any man's books and expose his business secrets merely for the purpose of ascertaining his profits will hardly be construed as a proof of corporate sympathy by any man except a Socialist or a near-Socialist. The man who wrote this article perhaps understood all that as well as I do, and he also understood, perhaps, that the sensible people who would read the Sibley letter would instantly perceive the absurdity of the inference against me, which he sought to draw; but he was not writing an appeal to the intelligent people of this country. He was striving to reach those who can be made to feel rather than to think.

While I could not rejoice in any result accomplished through theft or a breach of confidence, I am personally very glad that these Standard Oil letters have been printed, because they answer completely and forever the miserable wretches who have been filling this country with the charge that I am the friend and one of the attorneys for the Standard Oil Company, for these letters conclusively show that men connected in a business way with that corporation were telling them who I was and what my views were on certain public questions. Certainly, if I had been their attorney their business associates would not have thought it necessary to suggest that the manager of that colossal business ought to know me.

These letters do not, however, explode the charge against me individually any more than when properly considered they explode the charge against Congress generally. Remembering that for years these yellow journals and uplift magazines have saturated the public mind with the suspicion that all influential Senators and Representatives were in the pay of the Standard Oil Company and took orders from its officers, even their dupes must be surprised to find that there was no foundation for that charge; and that there was no foundation for it is made evident by the fact that after trusted and confidential employees had been bribed to steal everything that they could find which might inculpate Senators or Representatives, they have found correspondence with only three Senators, and none of that proves any official corruption. In saying that I do not forget that the owner of this magazine attempted to make out a case of official corruption against one Senator based upon those letters, by charging that Senator with having received a certificate of deposit for $50,000 from Mr. Archbold, and when that Senator replied by saying that the money furnished by that certificate was borrowed for a business transaction and had absolutely no relation to his official duties, Hearst replied by reading a letter from Mr. Archbold, in which that Senator's attention was called to what is known as the Jones bill. That letter was not different from letters received by every Congressman. I have received thousands of letters from merchants, manufacturers, farmers, and labor organizations urging me to oppose or support certain measures; and upon many measures I have received hundreds of letters from those who favored them as well as those who opposed them. But by connecting the $50,000 certificate of deposit with the letter about the Jones bill, Hearst sought to fix in the public mind a belief that the two had some connection, although at the moment when he read the letter about the Jones bill in an effort to establish a connection between it and the certificate of deposit he had in his possession a letter, or at least a copy of it, written by that Senator to Mr. Archbold returning the $50,000, with the statement that the business transaction for which it was borrowed had been abandoned; and that letter returning the $50,000 with that statement was written, as Hearst well knew, 10 days before Archbold's letter about the Jones bill was sent to that Senator. If every business transaction, no matter how innocent or proper it may be, is to be used as a pretext for charging that Senators are dishonest, whose reputation, sir, is safe? Only those who have no business, and the Government of this country must be reduced to the control of bankrupts and professional politicians.

Mr. President, I would be the last man here, or elsewhere, to defend a Senator or a Representative who had been recreant to his trust. Such apostates should be scourged from their high places, and their names should be effaced from the memory of men, or, if remembered at all, remembered only to excite in the minds of honest men a horror against their infamy. But, sir, to falsely accuse an honest and faithful Senator or Representative is a crime almost as great as to excuse the other kind. That dishonest men have sometimes cultivated their popularity with such success as to win an election to the Congress of the United States is undoubtedly true, but they have been the exception and not the rule. When unmasked such men should have been driven forth as unfit for association with their colleagues, and not treated simply as a type of all the others, as these scandal mongers have treated them.

Dishonest men sometimes find their way into the pulpit, but shall we distrust all preachers because a bad one now and then degrades his sacred calling? Shall we join the surging mob made up of infidels and atheists to tear down the churches; shall we reject the consolations of religion, close our Bibles, and search the Scriptures no more for eternal life because a hypocrite occasionally procures permission from the church to preach? Shall we take our children from the schools and colleges and let them grow up in ignorance because some teacher or professor turns out to be a rascal? Shall we deny ourselves the conveniences of a bank and bury our hard-earned savings because now and then a cashier absconds, stealing the widow's mite and the orphan's portion? Shall we set our faces against the honest merchants of the land because now and then we find one who will cheat us with light weight or short measure? It would, sir, be as sensible to do all these things as it is for us to tear down this best and greatest Government under which the human race has ever found protection because now and then some man who has been trusted by the people abuses their confidence and betrays their interest.

Oh, no, Mr. President: what we need in this country and at this time is more confidence in our representatives, because this eternal war against them has made too many of them cowards. Every man in these two Houses of Congress knows that his associates are, with rare exceptions, as upright and as honest as he is; but many of them are afraid to say that much to their constituents, lest they should themselves become suspected. Many of them hear their colleagues slandered and do not defend them, because the curse of the age seems to be that no man is considered honest unless he accuses all other men of dishonesty or else sits silent when they are accused.

Mr. President, I am soon to terminate my public service, and I shall henceforth have no interest in this Government other than that of a private citizen; but before I go I want to bear this testimony in behalf of the men with whom I have served: I want to say of those with whom I have differed, as well as of those with whom I have agreed in politics, that they were as much above treachery and dishonor as any equal number of men ever assembled for any work. During my 22 years in these two Houses of Congress I have been associated with perhaps 2,000 men, and among all that number I could count on the fingers of a single hand those whose absolute integrity I have ever had the slightest reason to suspect. Among them I do not believe that there have been five men who could have been bribed with any sum of money to do what they knew was wrong; but candor toward all and good faith toward the people require that I shall also say that I have known a much larger number whom fear sometimes deterred from doing what they knew was right. I do not mean that they feared some special interest, or that they feared the lobby, of which we hear so much and see so little; but, sir, they feared the displeasure of their people.

No nobler sentiment ever animated a Representative than a desire to please those who had honored him with their confidence, but to my way of thinking it is nobler still to serve the people than it is to please them. There was a time when Senapeople than it is to please them. There was a time when Senators and Representatives, having done what they believed their duty required of them, did not fear to go back to their States and districts and lay the question fully and frankly before their people. By such a course a Senator or Representative sometimes lost his office, but he saved his self-respect, and that ought to be worth more than all of the offices in the world. Under a system like that the people can be educated on public questions; for in those great debates principles instead of men were the themes and they became the high schools of American politics, where the people were trained in the difficult art of self-government. Let us pray that those days and those debates will come again, so that in them and through them we may learn to appreciate the debt we owe "The Fathers" for this Government which in the words of Jefferson is so free as to restrain us in no moral right, and so firm as to protect us from every moral wrong. With this lesson on our minds and with an undying gratitude in our hearts, we can teach our children to repeat the inspiring words of Justice Story, who thus concluded the last chapter of his commentaries:

Let the American youth never forget that they possess a noble inheritance, bought by the toils and sufferings and blood of their ancestors, and capable, if wisely improved and faithfully guarded, of transmitting to their latest posterity all the substantial blessings of life, the peaceful enjoyment of liberty, property, religion, and independence. The structure has been erected by architects of consummate skill and fidelity; its foundations are solid; its compartments are beautiful as well as useful; its arrangements are full of wisdom and order; and its defenses are impregnable from without. It has been reared for immortality, if the work of man may justly aspire to such title. It may, nevertheless, perish in an hour by the folly or corruption or negligence of its only keepers—The People. Republics are created by the virtue, public spirit, and intelligence of the citizens. They fall when the wise are banished from the public council, because they dare to be honest; and the profligate are rewarded, because they flatter the people in order to betray them.

Mr. President, I am now, and I shall be to the end of my life, opposed to kings, aristocracies, and mobs. shall support so long as I live, the glorious Republic of our fathers. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

During the delivery of Mr. Balley's speech,
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Texas kindly suspend for a moment? The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Texas will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. BAILEY's speech, Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as I have the honor in part to represent a State in which the people have reserved to themselves a part of their power under the initiative and referendum, I feel it incumbent upon me here and now to make reply to the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. Balley], whom the Senate is always pleased to hear, and as I sat in my seat and listened to the singularly sweet and flexible voice of the Sen-ator and heard him swell the most commonplace subjects and even untenable propositions into rich eloquence, I thought how apt was the statement of Boswell, "that the object of oratory was not truth only, but persuasiveness as well." Indeed, the allurement of the Senator's oratory reminded me of the lines which Swift is said to have indited to Pope:

From him I can not hear a line, Except I sigh and wish it mine. For he can in one sentence fix More things than I can say in six.

During his address the Senator from Texas adverted to Hon. William Randolph Hearst, and, if I understood the Senator's words aright, he intended to impute some questionable motives to Mr. Hearst. I would be false to the conduct I have marked out for myself, and false to a valued friend, if I did not in this place say that, while I know nothing of the differences which exist between Mr. Hearst and the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], I am able to say that I know Mr. Hearst to be a loving father, a faithful husband, a loyal friend, and a man whose name is honorably associated with the auspicious commence ment and successful conclusion of hundreds of movements that make for the strength of the State, the happiness, the prosperity, the glory, and the greatness of our Nation. I believe, moreover, that Mr. Hearst is a sincere patriot, a true friend of the people, and a man of great courage and foresight. On this subject more than this need not be said; less than this by me could not be said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will please suspend for one moment

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not ask for order.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will endeavor to preserve order whether the Senator asks for it or not. The Senate will be in order and the galleries will be in order.

DIRECT LEGISLATION.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Texas has proceeded upon a false hypothesis in assuming, as he seemingly has all through his argument, that the advocates of direct legislation intend to destroy representative government. Such is not the intention of the advocates of direct legislation, but they do take the position that while direct legislation is not intended as a substitute for the lawmaking power it is intended to supplement the lawmaking power and to supply the deficiencies and delinquencies which the people's chosen representatives sometimes exhibit in the State legislatures.

During the course of the brilliant speech of the Senator from Texas, he stated that frequently a large percentage of the voters do not go to the polls, and therefore do not vote upon constitutional amendments, referred laws, and measures proposed by initiative petition. Mr. President, admitting for the sake of argument that this criticism is apt and just, I ask, Where will relief be found? Certainly not in the Senate, for here we have, when all the States are represented, 96 Senators, each paid a salary of $7,500 per year to remain here and vote upon measures, yet sometimes we find that we are without a quorum, and frequently legislation is determined by a vote as low as 30 per cent of the entire membership of the Senate, with only 55 per cent, 60 per cent, or 70 per cent of the membership of the Senate voting on the measure. In other words, a close investigation will disclose that there is as large a percentage of the Senators not voting on various questions as there is percentage of voters in a State who fail or decline to vote upon constitutional amendments, referred laws, or measures proposed by ini-I have at some labor investigated the RECORD, and find that during the second session of the Sixty-second Congress there was an astonishingly large percentage of nouvoting Senators, so that the argument that the people do not vote under the initiative and referendum must fall to the ground when it is remembered that the percentage of persons not voting is no greater than the percentage of the Senators who are absent or paired, and who therefore do not vote, and I shall here read into the RECORD a list of various roll calls showing the percentage of Senators not voting. The list is as follows:

April 26, 1912. Being a bill (S. 2234) to provide for primary nominating election for presidential candidates in District of Columbia.

Yeas, 23; nays, 18; not voting, 54.

Less than quorum voted. Only 45 per cent of the membership voted on this bill.

Only 60 per cent of the membership of the Senate voted on this bill.
The bill was passed by a vote of 32 per cent of the membership of the Senate.

The system of direct legislation, commonly designated "the initiative and referendum," has been in various ways and different forums assailed as being opposed to a republican or repre-sentative form of government, and many who argue against the initiative and referendum take the position that there is only one kind of republican form of government.

In discussing what was "a republican form of government" the Supreme Court of the United States, through Mr. Chief Justice Waite, in the case of Minor v. Happersett (21 Wall., 175), said, speaking of the guaranty clause of the Federal Constitution:

The guaranty is of a republican form of government. No particular government is designated as republican; neither is the exact form to be guaranteed in any manner especially designated. Here, as in other parts of the instrument, we are compelled to resort elsewhere to ascertain what was intended.

And Mr. James Madison, in No. 43 of the Federalist, wrote as follows:

Whenever the States may choose to substitute other republican forms, they have a right to do so and to claim the Federal guaranty for the latter.

Thus we observe that the States may substitute other republican forms, and in doing so they do not forego the right to claim the Federal protection as to the substituted form; in other words, no particular form is prescribed.

The edition of 1785 of Dr. Johnson's Dictionary contains the following:

Republican (adjective). The placing of government in the hands of the people.

The 1791 edition of Walker's Dictionary contains the following:

Republican (adjective). Placing the government in the hands of the people.

Republican (substantive). One who thinks a commonwealth without monarchy the best government.

Charles Pinckney, who served in the Federal Constitutional Convention, in a speech on May 14, 1788, in the debates in the Legislature and in convention of the State of South Carolina on the adoption of the Federal Constitution, said:

We have been taught here to believe that all power of right belongs to the people; that it flows immediately from them, and is delegated to their officers for the public good; that our rulers are the servants of the people, amenable to their will, and created for their use. (See Elliott's Debates, vol. 4, p. 319.)

And in the same speech Mr. Pinckney, quoting Paley, a deacon of Carlisle (vol. 2, pp. 174-175), in enumerating the three principal forms of government, said:

A republic is where the people at large, either collectively or by representation, form the legislature. (See Elliott's Debates, vol. 4, p. 328.)

It might further illuminate the discussion as to what is a republican form of government by stating that under the now deposed "President" Diaz Mexico was republican as to form, but there was some difference of opinion as to whether it was republican in substance; but I only use this illustration to emphasize the fact that there are a number of different forms of republican government.

In the case of Chisholm v. Georgia (2 Dallas, U. S., p. 419 et seq.) the judges delivered their opinions seriatim, and Mr. Justice James Wilson said:

As a citizen I know the government of that State (the State of Georgia) to be republican, and my short definition of such a government is one constructed on this principle, that the supreme power resides in the body of the people. (See p. 453 et seq.)

This opinion was announced in 1793, and only six years after the drafting of the Federal Constitution, and it may be considered at least as a contemporaneous definition of the phrase "republican form of government"; and no authority, not even Alexander Hamilton or James Madison could be followed with more safety than this eminent James Wilson, the same James Wilson who in the Constitutional Convention of 1787 advocated the election of Senators by direct vote of the people. This same James Wilson was one of the great lawyers of his day, and became one of the most illustrious judges of the Supreme Court of the United States for under the judiciary act passed by Congress in 1789 President Washington appointed him as one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, naming also as Associate Justices John Rutledge, William Cushing, John Blair, and James Iredell, naming John Jay, of New York, as Chief Justice; and I might digress to say that this same James Wilson, with that loyalty to the public interest, that devotion to duty which characterized him and many others of his type, lost his life while traveling in the southern circuit where he was assisting Judge Iredell in the work of Judge Iredell's circuit.

We should not forget that when this James Wilson stated that he knew the State of Georgia to be republican in form the constitution of Georgia contained an "initiative" provision in a form as pure as the initiative may be found in any of the States to-day. Indeed, Mr. President, the constitution of that State provided as follows:

Arr. 63. No alteration shall be made in this constitution without petition from a majority of the counties, and the petitions from each county to be signed by a majority of the voters in each county within the State, at which time the assembly shall order a convention to be assembled for that purpose, specifying the alterations to be made according to the petitions preferred to the assembly by the majority of counties as aforesaid.

Mr. President, there is only one forum which has the authority to determine whether or not there exists in those States which have the initiative and referendum a republican form of government. That forum is not the Supreme Court of the United States nor any other court, and this has been settled by a line of decisions so convincing that it would seem idle to discuss the question. In every case, so far as I am informed, the Federal authorities, including the Supreme Court of the United States, have treated this question as a political one.

In the case of Luther v. Borden (7 How., 1), where the question was raised on the so-called charter government, or so-called Dorr rebellion, it was contended that there did not exist in Rhode Island a republican form of government, and the court said :

court said:

The fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States provides that the United States shall guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and, on the application of the legislature or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

Under this article of the Constitution it rests with Congress to decide what government is the established one in a State. For as the United States guarantee to each State a republican government, Congress must necessarily decide what government is established in the State before it can determine whether it is republican or not. And when the Senators and Representatives of a State are admitted into the councils of the Union the authority of the government under which they are appointed as well as its republican character is recognized by the proper constitutional authority. And its decision is binding on every other department of the Government and could not be questioned in a judicial tribunal. It is true that the contest in this case did not last long enough to bring the matter to this issue, and as no senators or representatives were elected under the authority of the government of which Mr. Dorr was the head, Congress was not called upon to decide the controversy. Yet the right to decide is placed there and not in the courts. (See p. 42.)

In the case of Texas v. White (7 Wall. U. S., 700-730)

In the case of Texas v. White (7 Wall. U. S., 700-730) and the case of Taylor v. Beckham (178 U. S., 548) the question in both cases as to whether any government set up in a State was republican was held to be a political rather than a judicial question.

In the case of Minor v. Happersett (21 Wall., 162), at pages 175 and 176, the court, considering the question of a republican form of government, said:

form of government, said:

The guaranty is of a republican form of government. No particular government is designated as republican, neither is the exact form to be guarantied, in any manner especially designated. Here, as in the other parts of the instrument, we are compelled to resort elsewhere to ascertain what was intended.

The guaranty necessarily implies a duty on the part of the States themselves to provide such a government. All the States had government when the Constitution was adopted. In all the people participated to some extent, through their representatives elected in the manner specially provided. These governments the Constitution did not change. They were accepted precisely as they were, and it is therefore to be presumed that they were such as it was the duty of the States to provide. Thus we have unmistakable evidence of what was republican in form within the meaning of that term as employed in the Constitution. form within the meaning of that term as employed in the Constitution.

A part of the "unmistakable" evidence which the court had before it when that decision was rendered must have been judicial notice of the initiative provision in the constitution of the State of Georgia adopted in 1777.

The latest expression of the Supreme Court of the United States upon this question is the famous case commonly known as the Oregon case, wherein the plaintiff in error contended that the "initiative" was in contravention of a republican form of government. (Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Oregon, reported in 223 U. S. Rept., p. 118 et seq.) M Justice White, delivering the opinion of the court, said: Mr. Chief Justice White, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

We premise by saying that while the controversy which this record presents is of much importance it is not novel. It is important, since it calls upon us to decide whether it is the duty of courts or the province of Congress to determine when a State has ceased to be republican in form and to enforce the guaranty of the Constitution on that subject. It is not novel, as that question has long since been determined by this court conformably to the practice of the Government from the beginning to be political in character and therefore not cognizable by the judicial power, but solely committed by the Constitution to the judgment of Congress.

As the issues presented, in their very essence, are and have long since by this court been definitely determined to be political and governmental and embraced within the scope of the powers conferred upon Congress and not therefore within the reach of judicial power, it follows that the case presented is not within our jurisdiction, and the writ of error must therefore be, and it is, dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Of course all candid and well-informed persons will admit that the Federal constitutional convention of 1787 provided for national representative government, but it does not follow that national representative government, but it does not follow that the delegates in their debates committed themselves to the idea that there is only one kind of republican form of government. Senators and Representatives from various States which have adopted the system of direct legislation designated as the "initiative and referendum" have been admitted into the Congress of the United States and occupy seats in the Senate and House of Representatives. Thus the only forum known to our Constitution, laws, and institutions possessing power and our Constitution, laws, and institutions possessing power and jurisdiction to pass upon the question as to whether or not the initiative and referendum constitute a republican form of government has determined that question in the affirmative, for surely Congress would not admit Representatives or Senators into the councils of the Nation from political subdivisions not republican in form.

Mr. President, I ask permission at this point to insert in the RECORD as part of my remarks an excerpt from the able brief of Hon. George Fred Williams, counsel for the States of California, Arkansas, Colorado, South Dakota, and Nebraska, and of counsel for the State of Oregon, which brief Mr. Williams filed in the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of The Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co. against Ore-gon, reported in Two hundred and twenty-third United States Reports, pages 118 et seq.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

THE DEMAND FOR THE SYSTEM.

IMPERFECT POLITICAL CONDITIONS.

IMPERFECT POLITICAL CONDITIONS.

It is apparent that our country is in a condition of reaction against the control of privilege as powerful as that of France in 1792, or England in 1838, or Switzerland in 1848.

In France the Republic was created, in England parliamentary government became a reality, and in Switzerland the Union of States was perfected; here we are perfecting our democracy. The present movement constitutes the most momentous political revolution in our history, conducted without bloodshed and even without acrimonious political contests. It is a movement economic in its nature and, accordingly, steady and irresistible. Its objects are political and it moves on like a tidal wave, which legislatures and courts can not halt.

The causes of this movement are apparent. Political organizations have not been responsive to the popular will. The effort to obtain good government by the selection of "good men" has failed. Legislators have become the people's masters in the exercise of unlimited power. Party platforms are not regarded as pledges. The people are unable to trust their servants. A power has developed which dominates politicians, parties, and public servants. Evidences of repeating, bribery, corruption, and perversion of delegates, representatives, and officials in cities and States have persisted, and even the judiciary has at times been found subject to influences hostile to the people's interests. The average citizen has abandoned efforts to regulate party machinery and to participate in party caucuses.

The new political movement aims to clear the avenues between the people and their institutions.

The new political movement aims to clear the avenues between the people and their institutions.

The new political movement of legislatures in the election of United States Senators have caused two-thirds of the States to devise methods of circumventing the constitutional method of election by the legislatures, and it is probable that in the immediate future the National Constitution will be amen the people.

The numerous laws of States for the prevention of corrupt practices and the limitation of campaign expenditures have been supplemented by national legislation, which is probably but the beginning of drastic enactments to maintain the purity of elections.

FAILURES OF THE LEGISLATIVE SYSTEM.

The founders of the Republic dreaded the power of the Executive. Patrick Henry inveighed against it. Jefferson insisted with impassioned force that the Republic would fall through the usurpation of power by the judicial department.

Prophecy takes a hard test by the light of experience. All fear of the Executive has ceased after more than a century of trial. For the first time the judiciary has become the subject of apprehension in the last few years.

But it is the legislative department that has proved the weakest of the departments of state. The people are strengthening this branch of democratic government by applying more democracy.

The sovereignty is being placed in practice where it exists in theory, with the people; the instrument is direct legislation.

In adopting this system there have been no interferences with the regular operations of the customary legislative machinery. Representative government remains, but its products are no longer beyond popular reach. Vicious and corrupted acts can no longer be fastened upon the people against the will of the majority.

Experience has proven that it is not safe to trust delegates with unlimited power to make laws, and the question presented in this case is whether there remains in the people the power to apply controlling influences to them.

whether there remains in the people the power to apply controlling influences to them.

The history of this year's legislation furnishes a long list of broken pladges.

The instory of this year's legislation furnishes a long list of proken pledges.

The governors of Colorado, New York, and New Hampshire have publicly denounced the legislatures of their States for failure to redeem the direct promises of party platforms.

Gov. Shafroth, of Colorado, declared that in the longest legislative session in 30 years not a pledge has been redeemed.

In Maine a direct primary act was refused by the legislature, and at the polls, under the "initiative" amendment of the constitution, the measure was adopted by a vote of 55,840 yeas to 17,751 nays.

In 1902, under a law permitting an expression of public opinion at the polls, the people of Illinois favored by a vote of 428,000 to 87,000 a constitutional amendment providing the initiative and referendum. The legislatures for eight years took no action. In 1910 the people again made the demand by vote of 447,908 yeas to 128,398 nays. All the political platforms indorsed it. The legislature this year has refused to pass the measure.

Even in England faith in parliamentary government has been shaken. Mr. Lecky says:

Mr. Lecky says:

"A growing distrust and contempt for representative bodies has been one of the most characteristic features of the closing years of the nineteenth century." (Democracy v. Liberty, I, pp. 142-143.)

Mr. Dicey remarks: "Faith in parliaments has undergone an eclipse." (13 Harvard Law Rev., 73-74.)

Gov. Woodrow Wilson has described the political situation as follows:

"Many of the old formulas of our business and of our politics have been outgrown. We still revere 'representative government,' but we are forced to admit that the governments we actually have have been deprived of their representative character. They do not represent us. They are filtered too fine through the sieve of secret caucuses and other machine processes; there are too many conventions preceded by too many private conferences between us and the persons through whom we legislate and conduct our governments.

"We, the people, have not free access enough to our own agents or direct enough control over them. We mean by one change or another too make our governments genuinely popular and representative again. We are cutting away anomalies, not institutions." (Boston Common, May 13, 1911.)

Such are the fallures and scandals which have created distrust in parties and legislatures and caused the people to secure direct control of their political machinery, their officials and legislative bodies through direct primaries, elections, and legislation.

States and governments were made for man; and at the same time how true it is that His creatures and servants have first deceived, next villified, and at last oppressed their Master and Maker. (Mr. Justice Wilson, in Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dal., 455.)

THE RECALL.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in discussing the recall, I must not be understood as making an assault upon the Supreme Court of the United States. I venerate that great court. judgments and decrees prove that it realizes the tremendous changes in political and economic conditions and that the present is a dynamic, not a static, condition of society. We hear frequent criticisms of the judiciary, but those criticisms are directed toward the inferor Federal judges.

Judges are very like the rest of human beings; they are as easily swayed by passion as are other men; some of them are as valu, as ambitious, and as subject to flattery as any other class of men. Their learning, virtue, integrity, and morality are no higher than that of the profession from which they are exclusively chosen—the legal profession.

There are good judges and bad judges, and the people may always be relied upon to exercise the power of recall wisely and judiciously. The people would never vote to recall a judge merely because of his rendering an unpopular decision, nor for reversing or affirming any decision, unless such decision or judgment were procured by corruption or bribery. With remarkable precision the public sees through the guises and disguises of the judge whose decisions are discolored by improper influence, by favoritism, or by bribery.

The recall would in no manner lessen the independence of a judge and the intemperate criticism or abuse of a judge by litigants, suitors, and attorneys temporarily disappointed over the loss of a case pending before the court would evoke no sympathy nor encouragement from the voters, while unfounded, unfair, unjust, or untrue charges or criticisms would strengthen the judge.

None of the Federal judges is elected by the people; none is removable by the people. Hence those judges who are incompetent or unworthy have yielded to temptation; the weak and needy have fallen, for the mere fact that a man has been appointed as a Federal judge seldom transforms his nature.

The Federal judiciary in America has grown to be the most powerful institution in our Government. More than any other agency it is in a position to promote or retard the advance-ment and true progress of the people.

There exists to-day a widespread belief that some of our superior Federal courts are havens of refuge for lawbreaking corporations and favor-seeking "interests." Many factors have contributed to this belief, chief of which is the method of selecting a Federal judge, supplemented with the fact that he is to a great degree subjected to certain insidious social influences and environments, and is thrown almost exclusively into the company of opulent men whose views he, perhaps unconsciously, adopts and acts upon.

The people are losing faith in the inferior Federal judges, and the chief excellence of the recall is that it would restore the people's confidence in these judges.

Mr. President, I ask permission at this point to incorporate into the RECORD as a part of my remarks an excerpt from La Follette's Weekly Magazine of November 23, 1912, entitled "The Arizona Spirit," which is as follows:

THE ARIZONA SPIRIT.

Besides giving women an equal voice in government with men, the new State of Arizona distinguished itself in the recent election by restoring to its constitution the provision for the recall of judges.

Thus is ended an interesting chapter in the present movement toward more complete self-government in State and Nation.

It was in October, 1910, that the constitutional convention of the Territory of Arizona wrote into the constitution, with which it planned to set out upon its career of statehood, the provision for the recall of all elective officers, including judges. This constitution was decisively approved by the voters at the polls.

Then the question of admitting Arizona to statehood came before Congress. A contest arose. Foes of the judicial recall wanted to force all mention of this "heresy" out of the Arizona constitution. Friends of the recall, reenforced by others who were not convinced of its wisdom but nevertheless unwilling to deny the people of this Commonwealth the right to determine for themselves the kind of government they wanted, fought against striking out the recall provision. A compromise was reached whereby Arizona was to be required to vote once more upon this matter of applying the recall to Judges. But on August 15, 1911, President Taft vetoed this proposal. He vigorously denounced the recall of judges, and declared, "I must disapprove a constitution containing it."

So, as the price of statehood, Arizona was compelled to strike this provision out of her constitution.

This the voters did in the election of December 12, 1911, but with the openly expressed determination to put the judicial recall back into her fundamental law as soon as possible.

And in the recent election, on November 5, they did so.

The voters of Arizona have again asserted a fine spirit of independence which will in the end transform all her institutions into instruments for maintaining full and complete self-government.

It is well for Arizona to have the recall of judges in her constitution if her people want it. It is even better for Arizona to manifest so dogged a determination to rule herself.

I am in no humor this afternoon to throw bouquets, but I will

I am in no humor this afternoon to throw bouquets, but I will pause long enough to say—and I see the publisher of that magazine honors me with a hearing—that Democrats and Republicans will not spend their time unprofitably in reading that magazine.

It is well known, of course, that President Taft objected to the recall feature of the Arizona constitution—placed his opinion above and against opinions of the people of Arizona and against the opinions of the men who in the constitutional convention represented the people of Arizona, deliberated upon and decided what the organic law of the State of Arizona should be. The convention which framed the Arizona constitution, which has been such a storm center, but has lighted the way toward a larger liberty for the people even of the older and more populous States, is well worth considering. The result of the convention's labor affords reliable means of judging the qualifications of its members, but the following data will be found interesting:

A former Boston man, a graduate of Harvard University, namely, Hon. M. G. Cunniff, now president of the State senate of the legislative assembly of the State, was the chairman in the convention of the committee on revision, style, and compilation. With Mr. Cunniff on this committee were four other gentlemen, holders of the degree of bachelor of arts, and there were many other learned men in that body. It was said that there were no leaders in the convention, and that was true, for each man had a strong, vigorous mind and did not need any leadership. The sovereignty of his citizenship, his education, and experience, which come soon in the great Southwest, were sufficient leadership for him. Moreover, a large majority of the delegates were instructed by the voters as to the kind of constitution the people wished, and the delegates so instructed regarded themselves as bound in conscience and in honor to carry out the solemn mandate of the people. Of the 52 delegates it is interesting to note that they come from 19 different walks

Total. The five foreign born all were of English descent. The average age of the members was 44 years, and the average number of years they had resided in Arizona was 19.

While the convention was, in every sense of the word, a deliberative body, the members did not use language as did Talleyrand—to conceal thought, but they used language to express thought. Moreover, in the debates they did not balance each sentence with the stand caution that characterizer passive each sentence with the stupid caution that characterizes passive intellectualism; nor did they immerse every sentence in a tank of diplomatic antiseptic before they allowed it utterance, as we do here.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that I may include in the RECORD as Appendices A, B, and C, being, respectively, copy of a letter to the public which other citizens of Arizona and I addressed to the people of Arizona upon the subject of the initiative and referendum, also copy of a letter addressed by me to the constitutional convention of the State of Arizona, and also a copy of an address delivered by me on March 27, 1912, to both houses of the Legislature of the State of Arizona upon the occasion of their assembly in joint session to ratify my election to the United States Senate.

granted

[The matter referred to will be found in the appendices.] Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, many statesmen, publicists, and editors frequently make the observation that we are now living in an era of widespread dissatisfaction, unrest, and searching criticism. It is fortunate for our country that their observations are not wholly inaccurate and the complaint not wholly unfounded, for smug contentment is a corrosive effluent, deadly to the progress, advancement, and happiness of a nation. A people free from the exigencies of life lose their keen in-centive to improvement; moreover the present conditions of unrest are only waves from the ocean of the great demo-cratic movement which ultimately will reach all the shores of the world.

From the very dawn of history, from the beginning of the human family down to the present time, the tendency of the human race has been toward liberty-mankind reaching out for freedom and immeasurably attaining it.

For the purposes of these remarks when I use the word "liberty" I must be understood as meaning "liberty under the law," for according to my view liberty is the result of law and not the absence of law, as some persons erroneously suppose, and I shall use the word "liberty," for the purposes of this speech, as an antonym of the words "serfdom," "oppression," "servitude," "captivity," "slavery," "injustice," and "in-

Civilizations were built up in ancient times, notably in Rome and Greece, and it is a singular fact that in the civilizations of those ancient times it occurred to but few of the greatest men and profoundest thinkers that all people had equal natural rights. The fight of mankind for liberty and advancement in one respect has been peculiar, in that at no time, so far as we know, was the movement ever completely arrested.

I could descant upon numerous instances in the history of the world where great men and great women made heroic sacrifices in behalf of human liberty, but the field is too wide in its scope for copious references to individuals, hence eras and movements only may be considered within the limits of this address

When the world emerged from the darkness of the middle ages the year A. D. 1492 was strangely propitious in heralding the dawn of a glorious epoch, for not only was America discovered in that year by Columbus but that same year beheld Boabdil, the last of the Moorish sultans, come forth from the Alhambra and yield up the famous city of Granada, a favorite seat and stronghold of Moorish power, to Ferdinand and Isabella. expulsion of the Moors from Spain and the discovery of this continent gave birth to an amazing awakening, for soon the stories of the voyages of Columbus and the discoveries of Cortez, Coronado, Drake, the Cabots, Frobisher, Hawkins, and Raleigh kindled the theretofore apparently dormant imagination of men. These discoveries doubled the earth, and ships of conquest, adventure, glory, and science began to cut through the billows of every sea. The expanse and magnificence of this new physical world thus opened to mankind had, as such things always have, its beneficent influence upon human character and the trend of the world's events, for mental and moral evolution and growth flow from a contemplation of the external charms of nature, and they always excite a lively and intense interest in human existence.

Seventy-two years after the discovery of America began the Shakespearean age, a period during which liberty, progress, and civilization made forward strides; and when Shakespeare's works were published it was ascertained that his writings, in addition to delighting and glorifying the intellectual world, also evoked remarkably strong patriotic and liberty-loving sentiments. For instance, in the play of of Julius Cæsar, he made one of his characters to say:

So every bondman in his own hand bears the power to cancel his captivity.

Years later the noble rhetoric and inescapable logic of John Milton and the bitter satires of Jonathan Swift, in his newspaper called the Examiner, published in 1710, forced the abolition of the censorship over the press, which was another forward step in securing a larger liberty for the people. The past 150 years, however, has been an age during which liberty has advanced to a greater degree than in any other equal number of years in the world's history.

In 1775 the population of the American Colonies numbered approximately 3,000,000 and was principally composed of the descendants of those persons who had emigrated hither to enjoy freedom of conscience, thought, and worship. They lived along that strip of land which fringes the Atlantic coast, stretching from Florida to Maine. In their veins was the blood of the Saarsfields and the Calverts, of John Hampden, who arraigned his King for the unconstitutional exactions of ship money; the blood of the Irish, whose ardent zeal for and affectionate attachment to liberty and freedom, and whose loyalty and devotion to free government no power can ever crush; the blood of the stubborn Britisher; the Huguenots, the sturdy Scotch, Welsh, Dutch, Scandinavians, the German, and last, but by no means least, the Jew, who has contributed to the progress, glory, and strength of every civilization.

These various families of men, transplanted to this new soil, and welded together by events and years, became the bravest race that ever lived Their spirit evolved the Declaration of Independence, written by Thomas Jefferson, that contemplative lover of mankind; and on the committee with him were Roger Sherman, John Adams, R. R. Livingston, and Dr. Benjamin Franklin, whose capacious brain could contain both lightning rods and constitutions.

These brave people cried out, "A curse upon the rule of kingly government and a blessing upon the newborn Republic!" and with their bayonets wrote another charter of American liberty on the backs of the fleeing soldiers of Gen. John Burgoyne and Lord Cornwallis. England then caught somewhat the spirit of liberty and "made good the declaration of her great Lord Mansfield that 'no slave could breathe her free air,' and thus in all her world-encircling possessions, from the Pillars of Hercules to the Indus, the fetters dropped from the limbs of every English bondman whose ear could catch the music of her drumbeats," so the present contest of the people in behalf of a larger measure of freedom is not a spasm. It is not a pulsation nor a leap nor a jerk nor a sudden start. It is simply part and parcel of the resistless advance of progress which can not be stopped or stayed. The movement is seemingly more pronounced at this particular time, because the facilities for communication afforded by the telephone, the telegraph, and the newspapers are easier than they have ever been before, the facilities for acquiring knowledge are greater, and for the further reason that men who sternly stand for national progress in times of peace are now recognized to be patriots as truly as those who upon the battle field fight for national safety.

In criticizing or discussing a "reactionary," a "stationary," or a "standpatter" it is unjust and unfair to apply opprobrious epithets to him. He is simply unfortunate, for he has either misread or failed to read the history of the world. Almost everything that has ever been proposed for the benefit of the people or for their increased liberty has been stubbornly opposed by reactionaries. Every world-important invention, whether it be a ponderous engine or an ingenious electrical contrivance, was ridiculed and opposed. Every discovery in science has been ridiculed by the reactionary. "Galileo was denounced and imprisoned for asserting, in accordance with the theory of Copernicus, that the sun was the center of the planetary system and that the earth had a diurnal motion of rotation. In both science and government many people prefer to remain static and undisturbed and naturally resent any interference with their settled beliefs. They look with suspicion upon innovations, new suggestions, and ideas as, in their opinion will interfere in any manner with their present interests." (See S. Doc. No. 438, 56th Cong., 1st sess.)

Hence their tendency to remain in the old ruts, violently oppose improvements or changes, and denounce inventors as cranks and progressives as demagogues. The stubborn opposition of the standpatter and reactionary in invention and government passes all understanding, and the singularly sad feature of it is that many of these inventions and reforms in government and economics have been opposed by truly great men.

Chancellor Livingston, one of the learned men of the State of New York, ridiculed the idea of a railroad in the United States, and stated it was his belief that if a moving body as heavy as a train of cars should ever get started the momentum would be so great that it would fly several miles beyond its destination before it could be stopped, and that no sensible person would risk his life by flying through the air at the rate of 12 or 15 miles per hour. When Murdock invented the means by which illuminating gas could be produced, the great Sir Hum-phrey Davy and Sir Walter Scott ridiculed the idea of its being put into practical use.

Daniel Webster, the expounder of the Constitution, expressed the gravest doubts as to the advisability of railroads, and said in public speech that the frost on the rails would prevent the train from moving or prevent the train from being stopped if it ever got started. (See S. Doc. No. 438, 56th Cong., 1st sess.) Every useful thing has been opposed in its day and generation.

Lord Macaulay once said:

Lord Macaulay once said:

Not only in politics, but in literature, in art, in science, in surgery and mechanics, in navigation and agriculture—nay, even in mathematics—we find this distinction. Everywhere there is a class of men who cling with fondness to whatever is ancient and who, even when convinced by overpowering reasons that innovation would be beneficial, consent to it with many misgivings and forebodings. We find also everywhere another class of men, sanguine in hope, bold in speculation, always pressing forward, quick to discern the imperfections of whatever exists, disposed to think lightly of the risks and inconveniences which attend improvements, and disposed to give every change credit for being an improvement. In the sentiments of both classes there is something to approve. But of both the best specimens will be found not far from the common frontier. The extreme section of one class consists of bigoted dotards; the extreme section of the other consists of shallow and reckless empirics.

Lloyd-George, one of the strongest statesmen of the day, in supporting his bill, noted that the public-school system when first inaugurated in America created a widespread protest from taxpayers similar to the present protests in England against the insurance bill.

The struggle for social justice for the people who perform physical labor has been even greater and more stubbornly resisted. As late as the year 1800 men were severely punished in England for organizing guilds or labor unions, and the condition of the working class was little better than that of slaves. It was not until 1875, in England, that the laws against the trades-unions were repealed. In the early days of our own Government nearly all the work was performed either by slaves or indentured servants, and wages amounted to an average of $1 per day. Heartless writers referred to the laboring classes as the "living machines which wealth possesses.

When Eli Moore, the first member of a labor union to be elected to the Congress of the United States, was about to take his seat in the Twenty-fourth Congress there was a movement set on foot to try to prevent his being seated. Contumely, scorn, and derision were heaped upon him by the reactionaries of that day, who believed that the liberties of the Republic were in danger because a member of the labor union had been elected to Congress. But the stubborn courage of Eli Moore, his superlative eloquence, biting sarcasm, and wonderfully piercing analysis convinced the Nation that no mistake had been made in sending a member of a labor union to Congress, and so strikingly did this journeyman printer, this organizer of labor unions, this so-called "agitator" and "demagogue" distinguish himself for patriotism, learning, and ability, that he became a confidential adviser of the administration of President James K. Polk. I mention these circumstances so that those who are supporting this contest in behalf of a larger human liberty will not become discouraged, but will become encouraged, when they reflect how much more intensely heated was the opposition to these reforms in the days gone by. He is wasting his time who believes he can stop or stay these forward movements in their progress. The movement, especially in behalf of those who perform physical labor, for a greater share of freedom, for the right to enjoy a part of the creation of their hands and of their own toil, will inevitably live, for it is as broad based as the world itself and as deep as humanity.

Independent voting is now a protest against the machine politician in public affairs, and the great power of the people has written itself in much advanced legislation in the past few years, for we have restricted illegal combinations of capital and we are now engaged in the struggle to conserve the natural rights of men and women.

There is a growing sentiment against private ownership of public utilities, and the people demand the right to elect United States Senators by popular vote. Markets and the mere piling up of yellow metal are beginning to be a secondary considera-tion. There is something more in the world than food and raiment. "Man can not live by bread alone." Hence natural justice demands that the labor of men and women shall be rewarded not only with sufficient food, clothing, and shelter, but also with independence, books, paintings, music, and flowers; with leisure time to spend with the family; with leisure time within which to cultivate the idealistic, asthetic, and spiritual side of life; for, as R. D. Owen once well said, "There is a corner even in our warkaday souls where the ideal lurks." corner even in our workaday souls where the ideal lurks."

We are now realizing that the lawbreaker is a human being, and that the lash, the horrors of subterranean dungeons, star-vation, and other evidences of vengeance are of no avail.

Under the old system-the man went crushed in spirit, broken in body, hopeless in soul, to the grim confines of the penitentiary, perhaps to emerge a marked man, branded with society's scariet scar of disgrace, a hunted and hated thing forever after, or perhaps never again to come forth, but wasting away in want and discomfort, doomed to die the death of a neglected outcast.

Under the Arizona system, with the wise, humane, and Christian treatment instituted by Gov. Hunt, the erring brother will emerge from prison reclaimed instead of ruined.

The great lesson yet to be learned by nations is the lesson of distribution. The earth can produce a hundred thousand times as much as is required for the comfort, convenience, and luxury of those who live upon it, and it might as well be understood here and now as elsewhere that this question of distribution of commodities must be settled, and it is not to be settled by a little timely patting on the back. It is not wise, it is not statesmanlike, to kick down the thermometer because it registers hot or cold weather not to our comfort. It is not wise, it is not statesmanlike, to destroy the barometer because it registers a coming storm. The heaping of all the wealth in the hands of the few, the unlawful speculations and gambling in food prices, have the effect of increasing the cost of living to a shocking degree. The heaping of all wealth in the hands of the few has the effect of reducing the multitude to poverty. With all our great wealth, the figure of want stalks amongst us, and thousands each year are destroyed by the Moloch of poverty. In New York City on December 17, 1912, a distinguished American statesman delivered an address and made use of the following

God knows the poor suffer enough in this country. We must move for the emancipation of the poor, and that emancipation will not come without our own emancipation from the error of our mind as to what constitutes prosperity.

Prosperity does not exist for a nation unless it pervades it. And the amount of wealth in a nation is much less important than the accessibility of the wealth. The more people you make it accessible to the more energy you call forth.

Mr. President, nothing wiser, truer, or more profound has been uttered recently, and I need not inform the Senate who made that statement, for Senators will perceive at once from the beauty of its diction and the correctness of its philosophy that it is the statement of Gov. Woodrow Wilson.

Gen. Knox, one of the first if not the first man who called George Washington "the Father of his Country," said in one of his reports as Secretary of War to President Washington:

It is the wisdom of political establishments to make the wealth of individuals subservient to the general good and not to suffer it to corrupt or attain undue indulgence.

Writing further, he said that-

Certain people solicitous to be exonerated from their proportion of public duty will exclaim against the proposed arrangement as an intolerable hardship but it ought to be thoroughly impressed that while wealth and society have their charms, they also have their indispensable obligations.

So, Mr. President, when we contemplate the infinite affluence and opulence of our Nation, and then remember that the eyes of millions of our countrymen "are sad with wakefulness and tears" because of the oppressions and hidden injustices caused by an improper and an unequal distribution of this wealth, when we see giant trusts, grasping combinations, and enmil-lioned monopoly madly and wildly struggling for more millions we must admit that the noblest service in which the public man may engage, the most courageous service the patriot may perform, and the most useful work which the humanitarian may do is to try to apply a remedy. This reform is a part, and a part only, of the great work yet to be done to insure complete liberty to all persons. That this evil will be abolished in the fullness of time let no one doubt, for Liberty has made her difficult but glorious way over thrones of tyrants, over injustice, over monarchs, and monopolies. She has been wounded at times, but has flown an eagle's flight, with "an eye that never winks and a wing that never tires." Her progress has sometimes been impeded by men who hold out delusive promises obviously incapable of fulfillment. Her progress has possibly been aided at times by cold and passionless conservatism, but aided much more by the erdent, fervent, and impetuous impulses of the human heart, for the spirit of liberty brooks no delay. She does not deal in diplomacy, policies, nor stratagems, nor does she deal with metaphysical subtleties. She is not proficient in the ignoble art of flattery.

The "conservative temperament" has rendered some service in advancing and preservice it between the conservative temperament.

in advancing and preserving liberty under the law, but enthuin advancing and preserving interty under the law, but slasm, enterprise, vehemence, experiment, and adventure have rendered services much more valuable, as they are the attributes that have carried the standards of progress and human butes that have carried the standards of progress and human but in the standards of progres happiness into the domain of ignorance, superstition, and injustice, and the noble enthusiasm of men and women of humanitarian impulse will in the years—the centuries—to come carry the standards of liberty yet farther and higher until shall come that day

When the war drums throb no longer and the battle flags are furled In the parliament of man, the federation of the world.

That day when no more men shall be hewn down by the sword of war; that day when in all this earth there shall be found no people oppressed, when no longer shall men and women die in a land of plenty for want of bread, and all shall have "the right to live by no man's leave underneath the law."

I thank the Senate for its attention.

APPENDIX A.

Copy of open letter addressed to citizens of Arizona advocating the adoption of the initiative and referendum: PRESCOTT, ARIZ., August 4, 1910.

To the people of Arizona:

PRESCOTT, ARIZ., August 4, 1910.

To the people of Arizona:

The Republican Party, after many years of "paltering with us in a double sense, keeping the word of promise to our ear and breaking it to our hope," has finally passed an enabling act granting statehood to Arizona, provided, of course, her people make a constitution that will be suitable not to Arizona's people but to President Taft and Senator Aldrich.

The enabling act itself is unworthy of the Republican Party, for by the terms of the Beveridge enabling act every principle of home rule was trampled upon, every precedent violated, and every true man and woman in Arizona humiliated.

Passing for the present the gratuitous slight flung at Arizona by the Beveridge bill, it is timely to say that by the passage of this enabling act the people of Arizona are confronted with the gravest responsibility they have ever met. They are face to face with State building. They are to build a constitution for a glant Commonwealth, that will guard the southwest border of this Republic until the end of time. They must build a constitution not only for themselves but for their children and their children's children—a structure that will endure. In this situation it behooves us to act as men, not as politicians or "place hunters"; it behoves us to subordinate every personal ambition, for upon our correct action in building this constitution depends the everlasting success or misery of our people and of our posterity, and if we build a constitution guaranteeing equal rights to all men and special privileges to none we may rest assured that whatever woes betide our people they will with their sterling manhood and womanhood triumph over every difficulty and make the State of Arizona the glory of America, the admiration of all the world.

The paramourt duty of Arizona's constitution builders will be to write into that constitution those simple, organic provisions that will enable the people to rule, and chiefest of these are the initiative and referendum.

It is true some p write into that constitution those simple, organic provisions that will enable the people to rule, and chiefest of these are the initiative and referendum.

It is true some people object to the initiative and referendum, but these objections vanish like a bubble when pierced with the sharp steel of truthful analysis and experience.

The initiative and referendum is in full force and effect in Oregon, Montana, and Oklahoma, and in effect in a modified form in Maine, Missouri, and South Dakota, and within the past 10 days Arkansas and Minnesota have declared for it.

The initiative gives the people the right to initiate or to introduce legislation, if perchance, as frequently happens, their representatives refuse to give expression to the people's wishes.

The referendum reserves to the people's wishes.

The referendum reserves to the people's weapon, their representatives whenever a considerable number of voters desire to test public sentiment by a popular vote."

The initiative and referendum is the people's weapon, "that weapon that comes down as still as snowflakes fall upon the sod and executes a freeman's will as lightning does the voice of God."

The initiative and referendum allows the people to rule. The initiative and referendum will compel a legislature to enact laws the people want and it will cancel laws the people do not want.

Look about you and ascertain who are the enemies of the initiative and referendum.

Capitalistic greed (which cuts down, blasts, and withers the blossoming hopes of the honest toller and small business man) denounces the initiative and referendum. The attorneys for the trusts and monopolies denounce the initiative and referendum.

But, say some, Why not depend entirely on the legislature to make our laws?

We say in reply: The trusts and monopolies and those seeking special privileges maintain lobbyists at the capitol, and these lobbyists, with the patience of the spider and the industry of the ant, strangle measures calculated for the good of the people. These lobbyists infe the capitols and with a princely expense account, dispense hospitality, liberality, geniality, and favors; these lobbyists exude amiability and in presence and appearance are usually suave and urbane. They lavish praise and adulation upon this or that guilible legislator, and with scornful disdain refer to the honest and homely legislator as a "demagogue," thus, in the gay and giddy whirl of glittering things of the capitol, the legislator forgets his duty; but when the farmer, fresh from the farm, with the inspiration of the soil about him, which breathes the spirit of purity, of incarnate honesty and justice, goes to the ballot box, he casts his vote directly for or against a particular law, and he is uninfluenced by any consideration save the absolute justice and efficiency of the measure upon which he votes.

When the merchant, the miner, the railroader, the cowboy, the artisan, and the plain citizen goes to the polls under the initiative and referendum he acts as his own legislator and fearlessly casts his ballot according to the dictates of his own conscience for or against this or that particular law.

The constitution should provide for the enactment of a direct primary for the nomination of all officers. He who would go into public service must serve the public, not the system. He must serve his country, not special interests.

It is a fundamental principle of this Republic that each citizen shall have equal voice in the Government. To preserve his sovereign right to an equal share in the Government he must be assured an equal voice in naming his party ticket. The naming of men upon the party ticket is the naming of men who will make and enforce the laws. It not only settles the policy of the party, it determines the character of the Government, and the direct primary will abolish the "snap" caucus and the purchased proxies.

The constitution makers, however, must not attempt to make a constitution such as was desired by the late illustrious Titbat Tittleemouse, who wanted "a law giving everybody every tutional Convention, Phoenix, Ariz.:

Gentlemen: I write simply to convey my congratulations to the constitutional convention. The Democrats have faithfuly kept their pledges. The Democrats will leave a name remembered with expressions of good will in those places in Arizona which are the homes of those who believe in a "government of the people, for the people, and by the people." They have provided for the enactment of a direct primary for the nomination of all officers, thereby guaranteeing to each citizen an equal voice in the government and abolishing machine politics.

You have provided for the initiative and referendum, which will place into the hands of the people the power to protect themselves against the mistakes or indifference of their representatives in the legislature. Under the initiative and referendum it will always be possible for the people to demand a direct vote and to repeal a bad law which the legislature has enacted or to enact by direct vote a good measure which the legislature has refused to consider.

You have provided for the recall, which will enable the people to dismiss from the public service a representative whenever he shall cease to serve the public interest. Under the recall no official can hold his office in defiance of the will of the constituency whose commission he has dishonored.

No one, however, not even the most enthusiastic champion of the constitution which you have labored so assiduously to form pretends.

his office in defiance of the will of the constituency whose commission he has dishonored.

No one, however, not even the most enthusiastic champion of the constitution which you have labored so assiduously to form, pretends that the instrument you have darfed will, as to each and every particular provision, meet with the entire approbation of all persons—unanimity in such cases is impossible; it does not exist even in the domain of imagination—consummation devoutly to be wished though it be; but you have drafted the most concise and progressive constitution ever offered to any people in the history of the Nation. You have been criticized by some of the public press, as is its right, and these criticisms, although severe, in my judgment, were not inspired by malice, but by misfortune, for his horoscope is indeed clouded by lamentable misfortune who fails to see that you have labored to make and have made a constitution for the people and not for the system, for public interest and not for special interest, and that you have taken care to see to it that United States Senators in the new State shall be chosen by election instead of by auction.

You will meet with the approbation and thanks of the people of Arizona for your labors, for, by your methods of continually discussing, sifting, and winnowing, you have pursued the path by which alone the truth may be found.

With impressions of respect and sentiments of esteem,
Yours, very truly,

Henry F. Ashurst.

HENRY F. ASHURST.

APPENDIX C.

Address of Henry F. Ashurst to both houses of the Legislature of Arizona upon the occasion of their assembly in joint session to ratify his election as United States Senator, March 27, 1912:

Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, gentlemen of the legislature, ladies and gentlemen, I thank the people of Arizona for this high mark of their confidence and esteem and I congratulate your honorable body upon the fidelity with which you have obeyed the mandate of the people.

I do not subscribe to the political philosophy of the celebrated Mr. Dooley, who said:

"A genuine statesman must be on his guard;

If he must have beliefs, not believe them too hard."

For myself I believe in popular government. The remedy for a half-way popular government is to give the people more power. A celebrated statesman once said to the Right Hon. William E. Gladstone:

"The people are not always right."

"No," replied Mr. Gladstone; "but they are very rarely wrong."

Thomas Jefferson once said:
"Always trust the people."

Henry VIII, the most cruci tyrant that ever sat upon the English

"Always trust the people."

Henry VIII, the most cruel tyrant that ever sat upon the English throne, once said:

"Always watch the people."

It would be tiresome were I to describe in the limits of this address the details of the reforms that must come and that will come in the Nation, and in securing reforms I would especially urge that nothing be done in haste or in anger. We must remember that no wound ever healed except by slow degrees.

Nation, and in securing reforms I would especially urge that nothing be done in haste or in anger. We must remember that no wound ever healed except by slow degrees.

THE SENATE.

The United States Senate has been referred to as the Millionaires' Club. Bankers' Syndicate, and American House of Lords, and there is a widespread belief throughout the content of the senate is a form wherein monopoly and special privilege sit enthe Senate is a form wherein monopoly and special privilege sit enthe Senate is a form wherein monopoly and special privilege sit enthe Senate is a form the senate of the senate senate

THE JUDICIARY.

Section 1 of Article III of the Constitution of the United States reads as follows:

"The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior. * * ""

In other words, these judges hold their positions for life, unless removed by the process of impeachment, the impeachment power being lodged with the Senate. These judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, not one of them elected by the people and not one of them susceptible of being defeated or dismissed by the people, by a vote of five out of nine may undo the work of both Houses of Congress and the President and thus set at naught the will of a Nation of 96,000,000 people.

people.

We hear very much of the independence of English judges. It is true they are independent of the Crown only, but not independent of Parliament. A most cursory glance will show that with all the boasted superiority of English judges they are not independent of Parliament.

"The act of settlement passed in 1701, which provided for what is known as the judicial tenure, made the judges independent only of the Crown, since it enacted that judges might be removed by the Crown only upon the address of both houses of Parliament. The result in England was that while the judges made a few feeble attempts to claim the right to declare void acts of Parliament on the ground that they were violative of the judicial idea of natural right, they soon abandoned such attempts, and for more than a century no English judge has dared so much as to hint that an act of Parliament does not have the force of law."

We must not forget that there are also a number of inferior Federal courts that have been created by Congress from time to time. The reactionary decisions, particularly against the laboring men, as well as sweeping injunctions, have in a large majority of cases come from these Federal judges, who sit for life, are not elected by the people and may not be dismissed by the people. Hence it will not be sufficient to confine the operations of the recall merely to the members of the State courts. Therefore, I shall support the resolution recently introduced by Senator Owen, to subject these inferior Federal judges to a recall.

Thomas Jefferson, that sage of Democrats, had some very definite ideas about Federal judges, for, in writing to Mr. Ritchie, he said:

"The judiciary of the United States is a subtle corps of sappers constantly working underground to undermine the foundation of our confederated fabric."

Again, Mr. Jefferson, in writing to Mr. Jarvis, speaking of the judges, declared:

"They (Federal judges) have with others the same passion for party, for power, and the privileges of their corps. Their maxim is, 'It is the business of a good judge to extend his jurisdiction,' and their power is the more dangerous, as they are in office for life, and not responsible, as the other functionaries are, to elective control."

RADICALISM.

RADICALISM.

There is a strong suspicion as to the true progressiveness of those public men, who during political campaigns promise to serve the people, but who, after election, whenever any proposal is made for the real benefit of the people, cry out that such attempt is paternalism, or socialism, or radicalism.

A real Progressive will never be frightened from a high purpose. The calling of hard names did not frighten John Hampden when he arraigned his King for the unconstitutional exactions of ship money, and Thomas Jefferson did not permit himself to entertain politic doubts when he declared all men to be created free and equal. David Lloyd George, British chancellor of the exchequer, was furiously denounced when, in 1909, he introduced his budget. The lords called him a radical. Worse than that, they called him a thief. When he attempted to pass the graduated income tax and the graduated inheritance tax they said these were new and revolutionary measures, but they forgot that in the same year France raised more than $150,000,000 from these two sources. Lloyd George also included a pension system to save the workingmen of his land from the bitterness of want in their old age, and a system of compulsory insurance for workingmen, and the lords were immediately alarmed. They said these were revolutionary and radical, and forgot that when iron-handed Bismarck was building anew the German Empire one of the first things he did was to organize a plan to insure the workingmen and their families against those misfortunes so frequently met in the lives of workmen; and that on February 6, 1890, the German Emperor wrote Bismarck that "it is the duty of the State to regulate the duration and conditions of work in such a manner that the health, happiness, and morelity of the workingmen may be preserved and their equality before the law assured."

The Commerce Court:

ABOLITION OF COMMERCE COURT.

The Commerce Court is an unnecessary tribunal.

"The Interstate Commerce Commission as now constituted consists of five lawyers and two railroad and economic experts. The legal members by their long experience have become experts, while the purely expert members have in like manner become good lawyers within the field of railroad litigation. When such a body has fairly and fully investigated a matter within its jurisdiction, it is absurd in all cases, and rank injustice in many, to require its action to run the gantlet of two courts before the questions are finally decided."

Moreover, the law should be changed, to the end that any and all findings, judgments, decrees, and rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission shall remain in full force and effect until after a full and final hearing by the court of last resort, to the end that the people instead of the railroads shall have the benefit of the law's delay.

SHERMAN ANTITRIST LAW.

SHERMAN ANTITRUST LAW.

SHERMAN ANTITRUST LAW.

The mere imposition of fines upon trust magnates who violate the Sherman antitrust law is little more than a farce.

Trusts are composed of property and persons. Laws in this respect can do no more than to imprison persons and confiscate property. The Sherman antitrust law authorizes both of these punishments. Many statesmen believe in the theory of regulation, but if that theory is good why doesn't it work? If that theory is good, why is it that the trusts are more powerful to-day than they have ever been? The Sherman law has been on the statute books 22 years, and these 22 have been the era of the stupendous growth of the trusts. The truth is that you may fine a trust magnate as heavily as you please and by a simple raising of the price of the articles which the trust sells the trust magnate will quietly bring the money from the pocket of the consumer into his own pocket with which to pay the fine. There is, however, a remedy, and it is governmental competition or governmental cooperation. Governments now do many things for citizens that citizens can not do for themselves. If the Government has enough intelligence to build large irrigation dams, dig the Panama Canal, operate post offices, and build battleships, it surely should have the intelligence to follow the English example and build large cold-storage warehouses, so that the cattle grower and sheep raiser will not be obliged to accept the price which Armour, Cudahy, and Swift are pleased to fix.

A very good way to curb the Coal Trust would be to let the Nation open up coal mines, build railroads to carry the coal to the market, and there sell to all without favor or discrimination. And in this connection I quote from the very able and thoughtful article recently written by Gen. H. M. Crittenden:

"If it be 'paternalism' to do work in a more efficient rather than a less efficient way, to guard the people's interests and give them the best results for their money, then let it be 'paternalism.' If it be 'socialism. As to absenteeis

I read the other day of a boy's essay on the Government of the United States, and the boy defined our Government to be an organization—
"That can build warships, but not peace ships;
That can distribute mail, but not express matter;
That can run navy yards, but not stockyards;
That can build canals, but not railways;
That can give away valuable rights, but never get them back."

THE GOVERNMENT COULD SAVE MILLIONS BY USING ITS OWN POSTAL CARS. THE GOVERNMENT COULD SAVE MILLIONS BY USING ITS OWN POSTAL CARS. The United States pays each year to the railroads $4,800,000 for rent of postal cars with which to carry the mails, and the railroad susually furnish wooden cars that "telescope" during wrecks and kill or main the underpaid and overworked postal clerks. Remember that this $4,800,000 paid to the railroad companies each year as rental for the post-office cars is in addition to the $46,000,000 paid each year to the railroad companies for carrying the mails. Consider for a moment what an enormous sum of money could be saved to the Government if it would build its own cars.

The most expensive car, all steel, costs $12,000 and its average life is 25 years, so that with this $4,800,000 which the Government pays the railroads each year for the rent of cars we could build 400 steel cars annually.

the rallroads each year for the rent of cars we could build 400 steel cars annually.

The sum of money, aggregating $46,000,000 annually, for carrying mail, is reached because railroads charge the United States 42 cents per pound for carrying mail matter, but the railroads carry the express matter for express companies at three-fourths of a cent per pound. Such robbery of the Government must not be permitted to continue.

I am an advocate of the parcel post, and, as John Wanamaker said, there are only four reasons why we have been unable to get the parcel post, and these four reasons are the four express companies of the United States.

CONSERVATION.

I am in favor of common-sense conservation of our natural resources, but am strongly opposed to that bureaucratic policy of so-called conservation, which is really retrogression and stagnation, and which excludes the miner, the prospector, the live-stock raiser, and the homesteader from legitimate opportunity.

Land, coal, timber, iron, oil, and all natural resources were created for man's use. They are valuable only after labor has been applied to their raw condition and converted them into products useful to mankind.

The wholesale withdrawals of public lands and the narrow, strained, and illiberal constructions placed by the Interior Department upon the laws relating to such subjects have resulted in denying hundreds of thousands of our citizens the opportunity to earn a living, and such policy is annually driving thousands of Americans to Canada, where they may "get back to the soil."

Of course the Coal Trust, Oil Trust, and Lumber Trust encourage and promote these withdrawals of public lands so that the trust may retain its monopoly, which would be loosened, if not broken, were such lands placed within the reach of the ordinary citizen.

The best, indeed the only, way to promote settlement and cultivation of the public lands is to open these lands to the poor, to those who are looking for opportunities to make themselves independent, and to those who are endeavoring to escape from the landlordism of another.

THE TARIFF.

to those who are endeavoring to escape from the landlordism of another.

THE TARIFF.

In the schoolbooks that are used by the students in our schools we find a tariff to be defined as "an indirect tax, paid by the consumer, laid upon goods imported into a country."

It would be difficult to find a more apt definition of a tariff than this one found in our schoolbooks, but Senator Gore's definition is more sententious. He recently defined a tariff to be "a means of allowing one man to get without working for it that which another man works for but does not get."

The tariff affects the earning capacity of a man; it enters into the expenses of the home builder and the housekeeper; the prices of the children's clothing from hats to shoes are fixed and determined by it; and therefore it is of the utmost importance that husbands and wives, fathers and mothers, should acquaint themselves as fully as possible with the subject.

During the past 40 years the protected interests of this country, with marvelous success, have deluded the public into accepting and believing the ridiculous and false proposition that low tariffs bring low wages and that high protective tariff schedules bring high wages. Nothing could be falser or further from the truth.

Now, what is the purpose of a tariff? Tariffs are levied for revenue or for protection. Sometimes for both. But tariff for protection is the real purpose of the tariff in this country. Revenue tariffs contemplate the bringing of goods into the country. Protective tariffs contemplate the exclusion of goods, and are therefore always higher than revenue tariffs. Under a protective tariff sare high the consumer power of his goods, forces the consumer to pay more for the goods than he—the manufacturer—could sell them for in an open, competitive market. Hence when tariffs are high the consumer pays all the goods are worth, plus the amount of the daty to the prices of his goods, forces the consumer becomes a contributor out of his earnings and savings to the enormous profits of the labor.

The system of tariff for protection is a fraud; it taxes the consumer and does not raise his wage, and the fictitious prices of goods, under the tariff's operations, are fraudulently obtained by the false pretense of protection to labor.

The tariff baron is privileged to buy labor in the open market, and then, under the thin disguise of protecting labor, he sells his product to the people at enormous prices.

High protective-tariff barons and reactionary Republicans point with tiresome regularity to the fact that laborers' wages are higher in protected America than they are in Great Britain, but no intelligent or well-informed person will be deceived by that "half-told truth."

In England wages are not as high as in the United States when measured by the number of dollars received for a day's work. But when the purchasing power of a dollar is taken as the basis of comparison, the American is paid less for his services than the Briton. For instance, the English laborer can buy the necessaries of life for one year with 205 days' labor, but to buy these same necessaries of life it costs the American laborer 225 days' labor.

Thus we find a great work before the Democratic Party, and that party has always proved equal to every contingency. Its Thomas Jefferson was called a demagogue and his followers a mob when he announced "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none."

Its Andrew Jackson was called an anarchist when he destroyed the conspiracy of the national bank and saved the Union, but the immortal Jackson dared to follow the best promptings of his heart. To-day there are issues to be met as momentous as those which confronted Jefferson and Jackson.

After 15 years of reactionary Republican rule we find evils and and Jackson.

After 15 years of reactionary Republican rule we find evils and abuses which have discouraged and scandalized the Nation, but the Democratic Party is coming back to power. It is coming to untwist the choking grasp which the railroad companies have upon the throat of commerce, it is coming to drive from public office those who have betrayed the people, and as it comes it shakes the very earth with its mighty tread. In its ranks are the dust-begrimed toilers who make their sad appeal.

In its ranks are human sympathy and human love, and the women of this land, who in the silence of self-abnegation suffer while they serve.

serve.

It is coming to lift "some portion of that weight and care which crushes into dumb despair one-half of our people."

It hears the prayers of the oppressed and sounds the bugle note of the courageous and the strong. Those whose natural rights have been denied to them so long that they have even begun to doubt the justice of this world are thrilled with the joy of the deliverance which it will bring; the guilty grafters are trembling before it; it is coming to answer the voices of God's angry workmen, whose pockets a high protective tariff has picked; and as it comes it is sounding forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE JOHN G. M'HENRY.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. John G. McHenry, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions just received from the House of Representatives. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will

Mr. PENROSE. I submit the following resolution, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read. The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania. The resolution was unanimously agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 3, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 2, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of our souls, eternal and ever-present energy, the in-spiration of every worthy thought and deed, we thank Thee for the riches which have come down to us out of the past, material, intellectual, spiritual; for the glory of life, the pleasure of possessing, the joy of serving, the heroism of sacrifice, the sympathy for the sorrowing, the charity for the unfortunate, the praise for the well-dones along life's rugged way, the faith that lifts above the stars, the hope that never dies; the love that sanctifies the home, insures the perpetuity of the Nation, and makes the world akin. So may we bring our possessions, our wealth of mind and soul, into the new year, a thank-offering to Thee, O God our Father, making the world richer, brighter, more joyous that we have lived and wrought. And all praise shall be Thine forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of December 19, 1912, was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as fol-

To Mr. Burke of Wisconsin, for three days, on account of illness

To Mr. Bartlett, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. Campbell, indefinitely, on account of the serious illness of his mother.

To Mr. Harr, for one week, on account of illness.

To Mr. Neeley, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Curtiss, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10169. An act to provide for holding the district court of the United States for Porto Rico during the absence from the island of the United States district judge, and for the trial of cases in the event of the disqualification of or inability to act by the said judge; and

H. R. 10648. An act amending an act entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with the Indian tribes, and to protect the same."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5138. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assinniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement; and

S. 7448. An act restoring to the public domain certain lands heretofore reserved for reservoir purposes at the headwaters of the Mississippi River and tributaries.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. Townsend to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Briggs on the joint committee to make the resignation of Mr. Briggs on the joint committee to make further inquiry into the subject of parcel post created under the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1912.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, asked a conference with dence of aliens in the United States, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Lodge, Mr. Dillingham, and Mr. Smith of South Carolina as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE-LINCOLN MEMORIAL.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The gentleman will state it. The SPEAKER.

Mr. SLAYDEN. When the House adjourned on the afternoon of the 19th of December, a roll call was pending on a motion to change the reference of Senate concurrent resolution 32, if I remember the number correctly, which had been sent to the Committee on Appropriations, back to the Committee on the Library

Mr. BORLAND. Not back. Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, whether the proceedings before taken make it necessary to renew that motion at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that inasmuch as the previous question had not been ordered you would have to begin de novo.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Senate concurrent resolution 32—I think it is—referring to the Lincoln Memorial, be withdrawn from the Committee on Appropriations, to which it was sent, and sent to the Committee on Appropriations, to which it was sent, and sent to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] may have five minutes in which to make his statement, and if he avails himself of the opportunity I move that I may have five minutes in which to reply.

The SPEAKER. This matter is not debatable.

Mr. BORLAND. I know; and therefore I asked unanimous consent

The SPEAKER. So the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bor-LAND] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] may have five minutes in which to state his contention.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to object, but I think the House ought not to get into a position where it can not hear an announcement which I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] has to make. The House will soon be in that position if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Borland insists upon his request or the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] on his motion at this time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I may say, for the information of the Chair, that I know of the resolution that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] refers to, and it being evident that there is no quorum present I am willing, with the understand-ing that there shall be no forfeiture of rights in this matter, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] shall present his resolution of condolence, and let this matter go over until to-morrow without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. By common consent the matter referred to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] goes over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. MANN. It will be in order to-morrow morning anyway.

IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendment to the Senate bill 3175, to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, and agree to a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] moves that the House insist on its amendment to Senate bill 3175, and agree to a conference as asked by the Senate. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (8, 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama what is the character of the Senate amendments?

Mr. BURNETT. The Senate has not made any amendments. The Senate has refused to concur in the amendment of the House and has appointed conferees. We are insisting on our amendment and agreeing to the committee of conference which the Senate asks.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BURNETT, Mr. SABATH, and Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE M'HENRY.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 759.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. John G. McHenray, late a Representative from Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following additional

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution,

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of John G. McHenry, the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 3, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

Friday, January 3, 1913.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer

O Thou who hearest prayer, hearken unto us, we beseech Thee, as we make our morning supplication. Thou knowest our frame, Thou rememberest that we are dust. Thou hast made us to know how frail we are, and how brief and uncertain is our tenure in these houses of clay. Thou hast called from our midst a Member of this Senate, making us to know anew that the way of man is not in himself alone, and that it is not in us who walk to direct our steps. And to whom may we turn, our Father, but to Thee who holdest us in Thy keeping, living or dying? We humbly commit ourselves to Thee, praying that Thou wilt keep us evermore in Thy love and uphold us with

And now may God, our Father, who hast loved us with an everlasting love, and who hast called us into His eternal kingdom in Christ, comfort our hearts and establish them in every good word and in every good work. Unto Him be glory and honor, dominion and power, now and for evermore.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. Cullom and by unantmous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR JEFF DAVIS.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, it becomes my melancholy duty to announce to the Senate the death of my neeancholy duty to announce to the Senate the death of my colleague, Senator Jeff Davis, who departed this life at Little Rock on yesterday. With this simple statement there is announced the close of the career of one of the most extraordinary men of his time and section. This is not the appropriate time to analyze his purposes and his plans with a view of determining the philosophy that controlled his life, public and private, but another time will be cheen for that named when I shall. but another time will be chosen for that purpose, when I shall ask the Senate to lay aside its usual business to give attention to that feature of his career.

He was extraordinary in the sense that he inspired friendships that knew no deviation and no surrender and provoked criticisms that absolutely went beyond the bounds of all pos-To ascertain the purposes that ran through his sible reason. life will be the interesting study of those of us who had some opportunity to observe his course and to know his motives. I said, I shall not proceed further along that line at this time, as I hope to be able hereafter to join with his other friends here in paying proper tribute to his life and his memory.

I ask for the adoption of the resolutions which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas submits resolutions, for which he asks present consideration. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 417) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. Jeff Davis, late a Senator from the State of Arkansas.

Resolved, That a committee of eight Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate pro tempore to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. Davis at his late home in Little Rock, Ark.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

the deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed as the committee under the second resolution Mr. Clarke of Arkansas, Mr. Pomerene, Mr. O'Gorman, Mr. Bryan, Mr. Ashurst, Mr. Mar-TINE of New Jersey, Mr. Curtis, and Mr. Clapp.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution, and ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read. The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved. That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate, and the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment, do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to, and (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 4, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 3, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Help us, O God, our Father, to realize that we are Thine, that nothing in life or death can separate us from Thee. It is Thou who hast made us and not we ourselves. Death comes all unbidden and touches the deeps of our hearts. Comfort, we beseech Thee, the families connected with this body into which the angel of death has so recently come, that they may look forward into the bright beyond without doubt or fear.

Be with the family of the Member who is sorely afflicted; restore him, we pray Thee, to health and strength that he may pursue the useful walks of life. Keep us all and our dear ones close to Thee in the faith and hope of Thy ruling and overruling Providence. In the spirit of the Lord Christ.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and ap-

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10648. An act amending an act entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with the Indian tribes, and to protect the same"; and

H. R. 10169. An act to provide for holding the district court of the United States for Porto Rico during the absence from the island of the United States district judge and for the trial of cases in the event of the disqualification of or inability to act by the said judge.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to renew the motion to correct the reference of Senate concurrent resolution 32, which was sent to the Committee on Appropriations instead of the Committee on the Library.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the motion by direction of the Committee on the Library?

Mr. SLAYDEN. By the unanimous direction of the Commit-

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, in order to arrive at an understanding, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether this statement is to be confined simply to a discussion

Mr. BORLAND. I am going to reply to any statement which the gentleman makes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am perfectly willing to have a simple discussion of the rule, and have it confined to the rule.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that I shall object unless it is agreed in advance that the debate shall be limited, as it ought to be limited, to a discussion of the rule and does not go into a discussion of the bill on its merits. If it can be limited to that in advance, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Missouri agree to the limitation suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. SLAYDEN, I do.

I have no objection. Mr. BORLAND.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a parliamentary question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me first pursue my inquiry a little further. What rules govern the decision of this question? I would

All those in favor of referring the Senate concurrent resolution to the Committee on the Library will, when their names are called, answer "aye," and those op-posed will answer "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

House resolution 757.

Whereas the president of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Co. has informed the Senate that with the approval of Congress, as expressed by an act of March 4, 1909, the Louisiana Purchase Exposition has erected upon the site of the world's fair in the city of St. Louis a memorial to Thomas Jefferson, at a cost of $450,000, in commemoration of the acquisition of the Louisiana territory; and Whereas this statue of Mr. Jefferson is to be unveiled and dedicated on the one hundred and tenth anniversary of the signing of the Louisiana Purchase treaty, the 30th of April, 1913; and Whereas the trustees in charge of this great memorial have, through the president of the exposition company, requested the presence of a committee of the House of Representatives to participate in the dedicatory services on the day named: Therefore be it Resolved, That a committee of 12 Members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the Speaker of the House to attend said ceremonies and represent the House of Representatives at the unveiling and dedication of said memorial.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 963).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Congress, the Twenty-ninth Annual Report of the United States Civil Service Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 3, 1913.

SUNDRY UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 989).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States in regard to the work of certain departments of the Government, which was read, ordered printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

This is the third of a series of messages in which I have brought to the attention of the Congress the important transactions of the Government in each of its departments during the last year and have discussed needed reforms,

HEADS OF DEPARTMENTS SHOULD HAVE SEATS ON THE FLOOR OF CONGRESS.

I recommend the adoption of legislation which shall make it the duty of heads of departments—the members of the President's Cabinet-at convenient times to attend the session of the House and the Senate, which shall provide seats for them in each House, and give them the opportunity to take part in all discussions and to answer questions of which they have had due notice. The rigid holding apart of the executive and the legislative branches of this Government has not worked for the great advantage of either. There has been much lost motion in the machinery, due to the lack of cooperation and interchange of views face to face between the representatives of the Executive and the Members of the two legislative branches of the Government. It was never intended that they should be separated in the sense of not being in constant effective touch and relationship to each other. The legislative and the executive each performs its own appropriate function, but these functions must be coordinated. Time and time again debates have arisen in each House upon issues which the information of a particular department head would have enabled him, if present, to end at once by a simple explanation or statement. Time and time again a forceful and earnest presentation of facts and arguments by the representative of the Executive whose duty it is to enforce the law would have brought about a useful reform by amendment, which in the absence of such a statement has failed of passage. I do not think I am mistaken in saying that the presence of the members of the Cabinet on the floor of each House would greatly contribute to the enactment of beneficial legislation. Nor would this in any degree de-prive either the legislative or the executive of the independence which separation of the two branches has been intended to promote. It would only facilitate their cooperation in the public

On the other hand, I am sure that the necessity and duty imposed upon department heads of appearing in each House and in answer to searching questions of rendering upon their feet an account of what they have done, or what has been done by the administration, will spur each member of the Cabinet to closer attention to the details of his department, to greater familiarity with its needs, and to greater care to avoid the just criticism which the answers brought out in questions put and discussions arising between the Members of either House and the members of the Cabinet may properly evoke.

Objection is made that the members of the administration, having no vote, could exercise no power on the floor of the House, and could not assume that attitude of authority and control which the English parliamentary Government have and which enables them to meet the responsibilities the English system thrusts upon them. I agree that in certain respects it would be more satisfactory if members of the Cabinet could at the same time be Members of both Houses, with voting power, but this is impossible under our system; and while a lack of this feature may detract from the influence of the department chiefs, it will not prevent the good results which I have described above both in the matter of legislation and in the matter of administration. The enactment of such a law would be quite within the power of Congress without constitutional amendment, and it has such possibilities of usefulness that we might well make the experiment, and if we are disappointed the misstep can be easily retraced by a repeal of the enabling legislation.

This is not a new proposition. In the House of Representatives, in the Thirty-eighth Congress, the proposition was referred to a select committee of seven Members. The committee made an extensive report, and urged the adoption of the reform. The report showed that our history had not been without illustration of the necessity and the examples of the practice by pointing out that in early days Secretaries were repeatedly called to the presence of either House for consultation, advice, and information. It also referred to remarks of Mr. Justice Story in his Commentaries on the Constitution, in which he urgently presented the wisdom of such a change. This report is to be found in Volume I of the Reports of Committees the First Session of the Thirty-eighth Congress, April 6,

Again, on February 4, 1881, a select committee of the Senate recommended the passage of a similar bill, and made a report, in which, while approving the separation of the three branches, the executive, legislative, and judicial, they point out as a reason for the proposed change that, although having a separate existence, the branches are "to cooperate, each with the other, as the different members of the human body must cooperate with each other in order to form the figure and perform the duties of a perfect man.

The report concluded as follows:

The report concluded as follows:

This system will require the selection of the strongest men to be heads of departments and will require them to be well equipped with the knowledge of their offices. It will also require the strongest men to be the leaders of Congress and participate in debate. It will bring these strong men in contact, perhaps into conflict, to advance the public weal, and thus stimulate their abilities and their efforts, and will thus assuredly result to the good of the country.

If it should appear by actual experience that the heads of departments in fact have not time to perform the additional duty imposed on them by this bill, the force in their offices should be increased or the duties devolving on them personally should be diminished. An undersecretary should be appointed to whom could be confided that routine of administration which requires only order and accuracy. The principal officers could then confine their attention to those duties which require wise discretion and intellectual activity. Thus they would have abundance of time for their duties under this bill. Indeed, your committee believes that the public interest would be subserved if the Secretaries were relieved of the harassing cares of distributing clerkships and closely supervising the mere machinery of the departments. Your committee believes that the adoption of this bill and the effective execution of its provisions will be the first step toward a sound civil-service reform which will secure a larger wisdom in the adoption of policies and a better system in their execution.

POSTAL SAVINGS-BANK SYSTEM.

The Postal Savings-Bank System has been extended so that it now includes 4,004 fourth-class post offices, as well as 645 branch offices and stations in the larger cities. There are now 12.812 depositories at which patrons of the system may open counts. The number of depositors is 300,000 and the amount their deposits is approximately $28,000,000, not including $1,314,140 which has been withdrawn by depositors for the purpose of buying postal savings bonds. Experience demonstrates the value of dispensing with the pass book and introducing in its place a certificate of deposit. The gross income of the postal savings system for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, will amount to $700,000 and the interest payable to depositors to $300,0000. The cost of supplies, equipment, and salaries is $700,000. It thus appears that the system lacks $300,000 a year of paying interest and expenses. It is estimated, however, that when the deposits have reached the sum of $50,000,000, which at the present rate they soon will do, the system will be self-sustaining. By law the postal savings funds deposited at each post office are required to be redeposited in local banks. State and national banks to the number of 7,357 have qualified as depositories for these funds. Such deposits are secured by bonds aggregating $54,000,000. Of this amount, $37,000,000 represent municipal bonds.

PARCEL POST.

In several messages I have favored and recommended the adoption of a system of parcel post. In the postal appropriation act of last year a general system was provided and its installation was directed by the 1st of January. This has entailed upon the Post Office Department a great deal of very heavy labor, but the Postmaster General informs me that on the date selected, to wit, the 1st of January, near at hand, the department will be in readiness to meet successfully the requirements of the public.

CLASSIFICATION OF POSTMASTERS.

A trial during the past three years of the system of classifying fourth-class postmasters in that part of the country lying between the Mississippi River on the west, Canada on the north, the Atlantic Ocean on the east, and Mason and Dixon's line on the south has been sufficiently satisfactory to justify the postal authorities in recommending the extension of the order to include all the fourth-class postmasters in the country. In September, 1912, upon the suggestion of the Postmaster General, I directed him to prepare an order which should put the system in effect, except in Alaska, Guam, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and Samoa. Under date of October 15 I issued such an order, which affected 36,000 postmasters. By the order the post offices were divided into groups A and B. Group A includes all postmasters, whose compares tion is $500 or more and group B. postmasters whose compensation is $500 or more, and group B those whose compensation is less than that sum. Different methods are pursued in the selection of the postmasters for group A and group B. Criticism has been made of this order on the ground that the motive for it was political. Nothing could be further from the truth. The order was made before the election and in the interest of efficient public service. I have several times requested Congress to give me authority to put first, second, and third class postmasters, and all other local including internal-revenue officers, customs officers, United States marshals, and the local agents of the other departments under the classification of the civil-service law by taking away the necessity for confirming such appointments by I deeply regret the failure of Congress to follow these recommendations. The change would have taken out of politics practically every local officer and would have entirely cured the evils growing out of what under the present law must always remain a remnant of the spoils system.

COMPENSATION TO RAILWAYS FOR CARRYING MAILS.

It is expected that the establishment of a parcel post on January 1 will largely increase the amount of mail matter to be transported by the railways, and Congress should be prompt to provide a way by which they may receive the additional compensation to which they will be entitled. The Postmaster General urges that the department's plan for a complete readjustment of the system of paying the railways for carrying the mails be adopted, substituting space for weight as the principal factor in fixing compensation. Under this plan it will be possible to determine without delay what additional payment should be made on account of the parcel post. The Postmaster General's recommendation is based on the results of a far-reaching investigation begun early in the administration with the object of determining what it costs the railways to carry the mails. The statistics obtained during the course of the inquiry show that while many of the railways, and particularly the larger systems, were making profits from mail transportation, certain of the lines were actually carrying the mails at a loss. As a result of the investigation the department, after giving the subject careful consideration, decided to urge the abandonment of the present plan of fixing compensation on the basis of the weight of the mails carried, a plan that has proved to be exceedingly expensive and in other respects unsatisfactory. Under the method proposed the railway companies will annually submit to the department reports showing what it costs them to carry the mails, and this cost will be apportioned on the basis of the car space engaged, payment to be allowed at the rate thus determined in amounts that will cover the cost and a reasonable profit. If a railway is not satisfied with the manner in which the department apportions the cost in fixing compensation, it is to have the right, under the new plan, of appealing to the Interstate Commerce Commission. This feature of the proposed law would seem to insure a fair treatment of the railways. It is hoped that Congress will give the matter immediate attention, and that the method of compensation recommended by the department or some other suitable plan will be promptly

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

The Interior Department, in the problems of administration included within its jurisdiction, presents more difficult questions than any other. This has been due perhaps to temporary causes of a political character, but more especially to the inherent difficulty in the performance of some of the functions which are assigned to it. Its chief duty is the guardianship of the public domain and the disposition of that domain to private ownership under homestead, mining, and other laws, by which patents from the Government to the individual are authorized on certain conditions. During the last decade the public seemed to become suddenly aware that a very large part of its domain had passed from its control into private ownership, under laws not well adapted to modern conditions, and also that in the doing of this the provisions of existing law and regulations adopted in accordance with law had not been strictly observed, and that in the transfer of title much fraud had intervened, to the pecuniary benefit of dishonest persons. There arose thereupon a demand for conservation of the public domain, its protection against fraudulent diminution, and the preservation of that part of it from private acquisition which it seemed necessary to keep for future public use. The movement, excellent in the intention which prompted it, and useful in its results, has nevertheless had some bad effects, which the western country has recently been feeling and in respect of which there is danger of a reaction toward older abuses unless we can attain the golden mean, which consists in the prevention of the mere exploitation of the public domain for private purposes while at the same time facilitating its development for the benefit of the local

The land laws need complete revision to secure proper conservation on the one hand of land that ought to be kept in public use and, on the other hand, prompt disposition of those lands which ought to be disposed in private ownership or turned over to private use by properly guarded leases. In addition to this there are not enough officials in our Land Department with legal knowledge sufficient promptly to make the decisions which are called for. The whole land-laws system should be reorganized, and not until it is reorganized will decisions be made as promptly as they ought, or will men who have earned title to public land under the statute receive their patents within a reasonably short period. The present administration has done what it could in this regard, but the necessity for reform and change by a revision of the laws and an increase and reorganization of the force remains, and I submit to Congress the wisdom of a full examination of this subject, in order that a very large and important part of our people in the West may be relieved from a just cause of irritation.

I invite your attention to the discussion by the Secretary of the Interior of the need for legislation with respect to mining claims, leases of coal lands in this country and in Alaska, and for similar disposition of oil, phosphate, and potash lands, and also to his discussion of the proper use to be made of water-power sites held by the Government. Many of these lands are now being withheld from use by the public under the general withdrawal act which was passed by the last Congress. That act was not for the purpose of disposing of the question, but it was for the purpose of preserving the lands until the question could be solved. I earnestly urge that the matter is of the highest importance to our western fellow citizens and ought to command the immediate attention of the legislative branch of the Government.

Another function which the Interior Department has to perform is that of the guardianship of Indians. In spite of everything which has been said in criticism of the policy of our Government toward the Indians, the amount of wealth which is now held by it for these wards per capita shows that the Government has been generous; but the management of so large an estate, with the great variety of circumstances that surround each tribe and each case, calls for the exercise of the highest business discretion, and the machinery provided in the Indian Bureau for the discharge of this function is entirely inadequate. The position of Indian commissioner demands the exercise of business ability of the first order, and it is difficult to secure such talent for the salary provided.

The condition of health of the Indian and the prevalence in the tribes of curable diseases has been exploited recently in the press. In a message to Congress at its last session I brought this subject to its attention and invited a special appropriation, in order that our facilities for overcoming diseases among the Indians might be properly increased, but no action was then taken by Congress on the subject, nor has such appropriation been made since.

The commission appointed by authority of the Congress to report on proper method of securing railroad development in Alaska is formulating its report, and I expect to have an opportunity before the end of this session to submit its recommendations,

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The far-reaching utility of the educational system carried on by the Department of Agriculture for the benefit of the farmers of our country calls for no elaboration. Each year there is a growth in the variety of facts which it brings out for the benefit of the farmer, and each year confirms the wisdom of the expenditure of the appropriations made for that department.

PURE-FOOD LAW.

The Department of Agriculture is charged with the execution of the pure-food law. The passage of this encountered much opposition from manufacturers and others who feared the effect upon their business of the enforcement of its provisions. The opposition aroused the just indignation of the public, and led to an intense sympathy with the severe and rigid enforcement of the provisions of the new law. It had to deal in many instances with the question whether or not products of large business enterprises, in the form of food preparations, were deleterious to the public health; and while in a great majority of instances this issue was easily determinable, there were not a few cases in which it was hard to draw the line between a useful and a harmful food preparation. In cases like this when a decision involved the destruction of great business enterprises representing the investment of large capital and the expenditure of great energy and ability, the danger of serious injustice was very considerable in the enforcement of a new law under the spur of great public indignation. The public officials charged with executing the law might do injustice in heated controversy through unconscious pride of opinion and obstinacy of conclusion. For this reason President Roosevelt felt justified in creating a board of experts, known as the Remsen Board, to whom in cases of much importance an appeal might be taken and a review had of a decision of the Bureau of Chemistry in the Agricultural Department. I heartily agree that it was wise to create this board in order that injustice might not be done. The questions which arise are not generally those involving palpable injury to health, but they are upon the narrow and doubtful line in respect of which it is better to be in some error not dangerous than to be radically destructive. I think that the time has come for Congress to recognize the necessity for some such tribunal of appeal and to make specific statutory provision for it. While we are struggling to suppress an evil of great proportions like that of impure food, we must provide machinery in the law itself to prevent its becoming an instrument of oppression, and we ought to enable those whose business is threatened with annihilation to have some tribunal and some form of appeal in which they have a complete day in

AGRICULTURAL CREDITS.

I referred in my first message to the question of improving the system of agricultural credits. The Secretary of Agriculture has made an investigation into the matter of credits in this country, and I commend a consideration of the information which through his agents he has been able to collect. It does not in any way minimize the importance of the proposal, but it gives more accurate information upon some of the phases of the question than we have heretofore had.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

I commend to Congress an examination of the report of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and especially that part in which he discusses the office of the Bureau of Corporations, the value to commerce of a proposed trade commission, and the steps which he has taken to secure the organization of a national chamber of commerce. I heartily commend his view that the plan of a trade commission which looks to the fixing of prices is altogether impractical and ought not for a moment to be considered as a possible solution of the trust question.

The trust question in the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law is gradually solving itself, is maintaining the principle and restoring the practice of competition, and if the law is quietly but firmly enforced business will adjust itself to the statutory requirements, and the unrest in commercial circles provoked by the trust discussion will disappear.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

In conformity with a joint resolution of Congress, an Executive proclamation was issued last February, inviting the nations of the world to participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to be held at San Francisco to celebrate the construction of the Panama Canal. A sympathetic response was immediately forthcoming, and several nations have already selected the sites for their buildings. In furtherance of my invitation, a special commission visited European countries during the past summer, and received assurances of hearty cooperation in the task of bringing together a universal industrial, military, and naval display on an unprecedented scale. It is evident that the exposition will be an accurate mirror of the world's activities as they appear 400 years after the date of the discovery of the Pacific Ocean.

It is the duty of the United States to make the nations welcome at San Francisco and to facilitate such acquaintance between them and ourselves as will promote the expansion of commerce and familiarize the world with the new trade route through the Panama Canal. The action of the State governments and individuals assures a comprehensive exhibit of the resources of this country and of the progress of the people. This participation by States and individuals should be supplemented by an adequate showing of the varied and unique activities of the National Government. The United States can not with good grace invite foreign governments to erect buildings and make expensive exhibits while itself refusing to participate. Nor would it be wise to forego the opportunity to join with other nations in the inspiring interchange of ideas tending to promote intercourse, friendship, and commerce. It is the duty of the Government to foster and build up commerce through the canal, just as it was the duty of the Government to construct it.

I earnestly recommend the appropriation at this session of such a sum as will enable the United States to construct a suitable building, install a governmental exhibit, and otherwise participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in a manner commensurate with the dignity of a nation whose guests are to be the peoples of the world. I recommend also such legislation as will facilitate the entry of material intended for exhibition and protect foreign exhibitors against infringement of patents and the unauthorized copying of patterns and designs. All allens sent to San Francisco to construct and care for foreign buildings and exhibits should be admitted without restraint or embarrassment,

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND THE CITY OF WASHINGTON.

The city of Washington is a beautiful city, with a population of 352,936, of whom 98,667 are colored. The annual municipal budget is about $14,000,000. The presence of the National Capitol and other governmental structures constitutes the chief beauty and interest of the city. The public grounds are extensive, and the opportunities for improving the city and making it still more attractive are very great. Under a plan adopted some years ago, one half the cost of running the city is paid by taxation upon the property, real and personal, of the citizens and residents, and the other half is borne by the General Government. The city is expanding at a remarkable rate, and this can only be accounted for by the coming here from other parts of the country of well-to-do people who, having finished their business careers elsewhere, build and make this their permanent place of residence.

On the whole, the city as a municipality is very well governed. It is well lighted, the water supply is good, the streets are well paved, the police force is well disciplined, crime is not flagrant, and while it has purlieus and centers of vice, like other large cities, they are not exploited, they do not exercise any influence or control in the government of the city, and they are suppressed in as far as it has been found practicable. Municipal graft is inconsiderable. There are interior courts in the city that are noisome and centers of disease and the refuge of criminals, but Congress has begun to clean these out, and progress has been made in the case of the most notorious of these, which is known as Willow Tree Alley. This movement should continue.

The mortality for the past year was at the rate of 17.80 per 1,000 of both races; among the whites it was 14.61 per thousand, and among the blacks 26.12 per thousand. These are the lowest mortality rates ever recorded in the District.

One of the most crying needs in the government of the District is a tribunal or public authority for the purpose of supervising the corporations engaged in the operation of public utilities. Such a bill is pending in Congress and ought to pass. Washington should show itself under the direction of Congress to be a city with a model form of government, but as long as such authority over public utilities is withheld from the municipal government, it must always be defective.

Without undue criticism of the present street railway accommodations, it can be truly said that under the spur of a public-utilities commission they might be substantially improved.

While the school system of Washington perhaps might be bettered in the economy of its management and the distribution of its buildings, its usefulness has nevertheless greatly increased in recent years, and it now offers excellent facilities for primary and secondary education.

From time to time there is considerable agitation in Washington in favor of granting the citizens of the city the frunchise and constituting an elective government. I am strongly opposed to this change. The history of Washington discloses a number of experiments of this kind, which have always been abandoned as unsatisfactory. The truth is this is a city governed by a popular body, to wit, the Congress of the United States, selected from the people of the United States, who own Washington. The people who come here to live do so with the knowledge of the origin of the city and the restrictions, and therefore voluntarily give up the privilege of living in a municipality governed by popular vote. Washington is so unique in its origin and in its use for housing and localizing the sovereignty of the Nation that the people who live here must regard its peculiar character and must be content to subject themselves to the control of a body selected by all the people of the Nation. I agree that there are certain inconveniences growing out of the government of a city by a national legislature like Congress, and it would perhaps be possible to lessen these by the delegation by Congress to the District Commissioners of greater legislative power for the enactment of local laws than they now possess, especially those of a police

Every loyal American has a personal pride in the beauty of Washington and in its development and growth. There is no one with a proper appreciation of our Capital City who would favor a niggardly policy in respect to expenditures from the National Treasury to add to the attractiveness of this city, which belongs to every citizen of the entire country, and which no citizen visits without a sense of pride of ownership. We have had restored by a Commission of Fine Arts, at the instance of a committee of the Senate, the original plan of the French engineer L'Enfant for the city of Washington, and we know with great certainty the course which the improvement of Washington should take. Why should there be delay in making this improvement in so far as it involves the extension of the parking system and the construction of greatly needed public buildings? Appropriate buildings for the State Department, the Department of Justice, and the Department of Commerce and Labor have been projected, plans have been approved, and nothing is wanting but the appropriations for the beginning and completion of the structures. A hall of archives is also badly needed, but nothing has been done toward its construction, although the land for it has long been bought and paid Plans have been made for the union of Potomac Park with the valley of Rock Creek and Rock Creek Park, and the necessity for the connection between the Soldiers' Home and Rock Creek Park calls for no comment. I ask again why there should be delay in carrying out these plans? We have the money in the Treasury, the plans are national in their scope, and the improvement should be treated as a national project. The plan will find a hearty approval throughout the country. I am quite sure, from the information which I have, that, at comparatively small expense, from that part of the District of Columbia which was retroceded to Virginia the portion including the Arlington estate, Fort Myer, and the palisades of the Potomac can be acquired by purchase and the jurisdiction of the State of Virginia over this land ceded to the Nation. This ought to be done.

The construction of the Lincoln Memorial and of a memorial bridge from the base of the Lincoln Monument to Arlington would be an appropriate and symbolic expression of the union of the North and the South at the Capital of the Nation. urge upon Congress the appointment of a commission to under-take these national improvements, and to submit a plan for their execution; and when the plan has been submitted and approved, and the work carried out, Washington will really become what it ought to be-the most beautiful city in the world.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. WORKS. I present a number of petitions for reference, one being a letter from Hon. W. W. Morrow, judge of the United States circuit court, with reference to the participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Francisco in 1915. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Industrial Expositions.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Industrial Expositions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 27, 1912.

Hon. John D. Works, United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Hon. John D. Works,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C., December 27, 1912.

Hon. John D. Works,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senators: Senate bill 7826, introduced by Senator Perkins on December 19, 1912, provides very appropriately for the participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, to be held in San Francisco in 1915. The participation is declared to be for the exhibition of "such articles and materials as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government of the United States, tending to demonstrate the nature and growth of our institutions, their adaptation to the wants of the people, and the progress of the Nation in the arts of peace and war." For the purpose of providing for the collection and exhibition of such articles and materials a board is to be created, "to be known as the Government exhibit board, to be composed of one person to be named by the head of each executive department and one each by the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, the Ishmian Canal Commission, the Commissioners of the District on the Civil Service Commission, the Commissioners of the District on the Civil Service Commission, the Commissioners of the District on the Civil Service Commission, the Commissioners of the District of Printer, the governor of Alaska, and the Geographic Board."

I beg leave to suggest that the American National Red Cross be added to this list. This society, as you know, occupies a very prominent and important position in this country and in the web-d at large in the care of the sick and wounded in time of war and in mitigating the sufferings caused by pestilence, famine, fire, floods, and other great natural calamities in times of peace. It therefore illustrates in its work and in the methods it employs the progress the people have made in the disasters caused by great calamities.

The American National Red Cross as new organized was incorporated the progress that provide the mitigating the evils inseparable from w wounded of armies in time of war, as, for example, in the Russian-Japanese war and in the present war between the Balkan States and Turkey. In this relief work it has expended over $6,000,000 since 1905. I mention these features of the work and organization of the American National Red Cross to show that it is practically a Government organization, whose work and methods of procedure bring it peculiarly within the terms of the bill providing for a participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in San Francisco in 1915.

in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in San Francisco in 1915.

The society is not only national but international, and in both form of activities it is proposed to hold national and international sessions in San Francisco in 1915 for the purpose of illustrating its work in both peace and war, and it is also proposed to make an exhibition of articles and materials illustrating the scope and character of such relief work.

In this connection, San Francisco itself will be an exhibit of the value of Red Cross relief in promoting its recovery from the direful effects of the earthquake and fire of 1906. In other words, the Red Cross, both national and international, will be an instructive feature of the exhibition, showing the function and administrative faculty of the people of the United States in mitigating the evils of war and affording relief to sufferers in times of great calamities.

I therefore respectfully suggest that a representative of the American National Red Cross be placed on the board provided in Senate bill 7826, and that the bill should be so amended in committee.

I inclose for your information copies of the following:

1. The American National Red Cross—Charter and by-laws.

2. The American National Red Cross—Origin, purpose, organization.

3. Conservation. The principle of the Red Cross. An address by Miss Mabel Boardman.

Very respectfully,

Very respectfully, War THE AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS. WM. W. MORROW.

ORIGIN.

The International Conference of Geneva, held in 1863, recommended "that there exist in every country a committee whose mission consists in cooperating in times of war with the hospital service of the armies by all means in its power."

The Geneva Convention of 1864 and the Geneva Convention of 1906, the Inter held for the revision of the treaty of Geneva—sometimes called the "Red Cross Treaty"—give definite status to the officially recognized volunteer aid societies. These volunteer aid societies, because of the character of the insignia or badge adopted to distinguish their personnel and matériel—a Greek red cross on a white ground—are universally known as "Red Cross Societies."

PURPOSES.

The original purpose for the organization of Red Cross Societies, as will be inferred from the above, was to supplement the medical services of armies in time of war.

The great need, however, of a thoroughly trained and efficient organization, national in scope and permanent in character, to render assistance after great disasters, has been so well established that many of the Red Cross Societies have extended their functions to include rellef operations in time of peace. Indeed, it has been proved that those societies which are most active in conducting relief and preventive measures in time of peace are best prepared to cope with the extraordinary requirements of war.

Recognizing this fact, the United States Congress, by the act approved January 5, 1905, to incorporate the American Red Cross and place it under Government supervision, declared its purposes—in addition to its duties in time of war—to be: "To continue and carry on a system of national and international relief in time of peace and apply the same in mitigating the sufferings caused by pestilence, famine, fire, floods, and other great national calamities, and to devise and carry on measures for preventing the same."

ORGANIZATION.

ORGANIZATION.

ORGANIZATION.

The American National Red Cross is incorporated by act of the United States Congress. Its officers are a president, vice president, secretary, counselor, treasurer, and national director. Section 5 of the act of incorporation provides that "the governing body of the said American Red Cross shall consist, in the first instance, of a central committee numbering 18 persons." The law also provides that the chairman and five members of the central committee shall be appointed annually by the President of the United States, the five members appointed by the President to represent the Departments of State, War, Navy, Treasury, and Justice. Twelve members are elected at the regular annual meeting of the society.

The central committee is empowered by law to elect from its own members an executive committee of seven, to which is given all powers of the central committee when the latter is not in session.

The by-laws provide for three relief boards, namely, the war relief board, the national relief board, and the international relief board. To each of these boards have been assigned special duties in connection with its particular department of relief operations.

The first-aid department and the nursing service are under the direction of two subcommittees appointed by the war relief board. The first-aid committee is engaged in promoting first-aid instruction among the employees of mining companies, railroads, industrial establishments, and the public at large, and the committee on nursing service is engaged in the organization of a large corps of the best trained nurses of the country for service under the Red Cross in time of war or disaster.

State and local organizations: State boards, consisting of from 3

State and local organizations: State boards, consisting of from 3 to 10 persons, appointed by the chairman of the central committee, constitute a permanent emergency committee in every State. The governor of the State is the president of the board.

Besides these State boards there are local organizations in upward of 100 cities. These local bodies are known as chapters. Each has its own officers and members. These chapters are of service in the collection of funds and supplies for relief when a call is made upon them by the central committee. When a disaster occurs in the territory of a chapter, the chapter, together with the institutional member, if there be one within its jurisdiction, enters immediately upon measures of relief.

Institutional members: It has been regarded by the central committee of relief.

Institutional members: It has been regarded by the central committee as desirable to bring to the command of the Red Cross for emergency work following great calamities trained service such as is to be found only in the ranks of well-organized charitable societies in the larger cities of the United States. To meet this need there has been created an "institutional membership" in which there have been enrolled a number of the most efficient charitable societies of the United States.

The national director: The national director is the official representative of the central committee and national relief board, and upon his arrival at the scene of a disaster where Red Cross assistance is rerequired takes charge of the relief operations.

The endowment fund: The endowment fund is managed and controlled by a board of nine trustees.

Reports: The Red Cross is required by law to make an annual report of its proceedings to the Secretary of War. This report is transmitted by the Secretary of War to Congress, where it is printed as a public document.

Audit of accounts: The law requires that the accounts of the American Red Cross be audited annually by the War Department. This is the best possible assurance that the funds intrusted to the society for expenditure will be properly and accurately accounted for.

The American Red Cross bulletin: The Red Cross publishes a quarterly magazine devoted to the interests of the society and contains illustrated articles relating to relief operations in the United States and foreign countries.

Magnitude of the work of the American Red Cross: Since the reincorporation of the society in 1905, the Red Cross has rendered relief after more than 40 disasters caused by earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, fires, floods, famines, mine explosions, and wars in this and foreign countries. The funds received by the American Red Cross and expended in relief since January, 1905, exceed $5,000,000.

General membership: Any citizen of the United States is eligible for enrollment as a member of the Red Cross. There are three classes of membership—life membership, sustaining membership, and annual membership. The dues for life membership and for annual membership, $1, payable annually; and for annual membership, $1, payable annually: Applications for enrollment should be addressed to the secretary of the American Red Cross, Washington, D. C., or to the secretary of a local chapter. All members receive the quarterly bulletin during the period of their membership.

RIGHT OF APPEAL FROM DEPARTMENTAL DECISIONS.

Mr. JONES. I have a copy of a resolution adopted by the American Mining Congress at its fifteenth annual session held at Spokane, Wash., November 25 to 29, 1912, favoring legislation conferring jurisdiction upon the proper United States district courts to entertain suits at the instance of any person in interest, and so forth, in all cases involving the claim or right and possession, occupation, title, or right to acquire title to any nonmineral or mineral lands under the mining or other publicland laws. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD without reading, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by the American Mining Congress at its fifteenth annual session held at Spokane, Wash., November 25 to 29, 1912. Whereas the Executive Department of the United States Government has from time to time withdrawn from entry a very considerable portion of the remaining public domain for purposes of permanent reservation or classification with a view of securing legislation from Congress, including forest, mineral and agricultural lands; and Whereas these withdrawals are avowedly made upon Executive and departmental conviction that the existing laws of Congress in relation to the disposition of public lands are unwise, and that new laws meeting Executive or departmental approval should be passed; and Whereas thousands of citizens have initiated or perfected claims to title to such withdrawn lands prior to the Executive withdrawal thereof, and have initiated or perfected states to the configuration of the configuration of the executive withdrawal thereof, and have initiated or perfected states to the configuration of the executive withdrawal thereof, and have initiated or perfected states to title under existing laws; and laws; and

Whereas such existing claims so perfected or made prior to the various withdrawals are adverse and antagonistic to Executive and departmental belief as to the best use to which such lands should be put;

whereas the laws and Executive orders of withdrawal provide that upon the departmental rejection or cancellation of any such existing private claims the lands thereby, by reason of such rejection, become subject to and available for the uses and purposes of such Executive or departmental withdrawals; and Whereas great controversy, complaint, and departmental litigation has resulted by reason of the departmental investigation, adjudication, and cancellation of such private entries and claims; or in delay in final action and because of long-continued suspension of such claims; and

and
Whereas there is widespread conviction among such private claimants and entrymen that the executive department, in adjudicating the rights of claimants, have not in all instances been successful in ignoring the departmental policy and belief that present legislation is unwise and rights granted thereunder are improvident and inimical to the uses to which the department believes the land can best be unwise and rights granted thereunder are improvident and inimical to the uses to which the department believes the land can best be put; and

Whereas it is a fundamental proposition in law and natural equity that no person, officer, or judge should have an interest or bias which could be aided or gratified by a decision rendered by himself in determining the liberty or property rights of another; and
Whereas the present Commissioner of the General Land Office, in considering his general jurisdiction in adjudicating questions affecting the right of persons generally to acquire title to public lands, stated, on page 20 of his annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911:
"It is impossible for the commissioner and his assistant to pay the judicial attention to these cases which they should receive. The bar practicing before this office has very little opportunity to submit its cases directly to those who are by law responsible for the decisions, because of the multitudinous duties placed on these officers. The head of the office can not find time to give individual attention to many of the most important cases which are submitted for his consideration"; and
Whereas it escretary of the Interior has numerous bureaus and manifold duties requiring his attention; and in his report to Congress under date of February 13, 1912, on H. R. 18235, in speaking of the single subject of appeals to him from the decisions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, said: "During the past two months, as an example, an average of over 300 cases per month have been decided in the department on appeal from the General Land Office." Which statement demonstrates the physical impossibility of the Secretary or his assistant secretary giving personal attention to the real merits of individual cases; and

Whereas the investigating agents and many of the witnesses used by the Secretary of the Interior in the preparation of adverse reports and the introduction and giving of evidence upon which the department must rely in canceling existing private entries are his own appointees and employees in whom he necessarily must place great faith and reliance, while the witnesses for the private entrymen and claimants are either unknown to him or by reason of their residence in the vicinity of the public lands frequently are themselves claimants to like lands; and
Whereas final decision by the General Land Office or the Interior Department is rendered at Washington, several thousand miles from the land and residence of the claimants; and
Whereas under existing law the decision of the Interior Department canceling an entry or claim upon questions of fact is final and can not be reviewed by the courts; and
Whereas we believe that in all cases wherein the Executive Department has withdrawn lands for a use or purpose adverse or inconsistent with the existing private eatry of a citizen, it is fair and just that such citizen may have his rights and the facts in the case determined in the courts and not in the Executive Department; and also that such citizen may secure action in the courts whenever his application is for any reason so delayed in the department; and also that such citizen may secure action in the courts whenever his application is for any reason so delayed in the department; as to amount to a practical rejection thereof: And therefore be it

*Resolved, That the American Mining Congress favors legislation conferring jurisdiction upon the proper United States district courts to entertain suits at the instance of any person in interest, and determine the law and fact de novo, and render final decision in all cases involving the claim or right to possession, occupation, title, or right to acquire title to an

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16450) to punish the unlawful breaking of seals of railroad cars containing interstate or foreign shipments, the unlawful entering of such cars, the stealing of freight and express packages or baggage or articles in process of transportation in interstate shipment, and the felonious asportation of such freight or express packages or baggage or articles therefrom into another district of the United States, and the felonious possession or reception of the same, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 7508. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to reincorporate and preserve all the corporate franchises and property rights of the de facto corporation known as the German Orphan Asylum Association of the District of Columbia (Rept. No.

1081); and H. R. 22010. An act to amend the license law, approved July 1, 1902, with respect to licenses of drivers of passenger vehicles for hire (Rept. No. 1082).

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8619) to amend "An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved May 7, 1906, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1083) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1787) to amend "An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved May 7, 1906, submitted an adverse report (No. 1084) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 6919) to amend subchapter 2 of chapter 19 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1085) thereon.

Mr. WORKS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (8, 7509) to authorize the extension of Twenty-fifth Street SE, and of White Place, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1086) thereon.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $40,000 for special mail facilities from the United States naval station at Pago Pago, Island of Tutuila, via Honolulu and San Francisco, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAWFORD submitted an amendment proposing to ap propriate $2,000 for the salary of the surveyor general of South Dakota, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $6,200 for the maintenance of the assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

COOPERATIVE DAIRYING IN DENMARK (S. DOC. NO. 992).

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a document a lecture delivered by Hon. Maurice F. Egan, American minister to Denmark, on the subject of cooperative dairying as practiced in that country. It contains some very valuable data of interest to our agricultural people.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator where the lecture was delivered. It is not a report as minister, but, as I understand, a lecture delivered somewhere in the United States,

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Egan came at the invitation of the Southern Commercial Congress to address its meeting held in Nashville, Tenn., last April, and while he was here he delivered this lecture in a number of States on the subject of cooperative dairying as practiced in Denmark. I think it is a very valuable

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

ADDRESS BY NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER (S. DOC. NO. 993).

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a copy of an address before the Commercial Club, Chicago, Ill., December 14, 1912, by Nicholas Murray Butler. It is a very important paper. I ask that it be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FAMILY BEREAVEMENT.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who was called home last week on account of the sudden death of one of his children.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRESIDENT ELECT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the concurrent resolution of the Senate of December 9, 1912, providing for the appointment of a joint committee to make necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President elect of the United States on the 4th day of March next, the House having appointed a committee on behalf of that body, the Chair will name the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Crane], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Over-MAN] members of the joint committee on the part of the Senate.

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION (H. DOC. 1216).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with the requirements of section 10 of the act approved August 24, 1912, I transmit herewith a letter addressed to me by the Secretary of War, dated December 23, 1912, submitting a letter from the chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission, dated December 13, 1912, and accompanying statement of all expenses incurred by officers and employees of the Isthmian Canal Commission in attending meetings and conventions from June 30 to December 1, 1912.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 3, 1913.

ANNUAL REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 963).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Congress, the Twenty-ninth Annual Report of the United States Civil Service Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HUOSE, January 3, 1913.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I submit a proposed amendment to the omnibus claims bill and ask that it be accepted by the chairman. It is a longevity claim that I present.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is in the form of an amendment?

Mr. CULLOM. An amendment offered,

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well. When we take up the bill it can be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCumber in the chair). The Chair will state that, as we are now under morning business, the proposed amendment will lie upon the table until the morning business is concluded and the claims bill is regularly before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. CLAPP. I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read. The resolution (S. Res. 418) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate resolution 79, agreed to August 26, 1912, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting, in line 2, page 2, of said resolution, after the word "eight," the words "November 5, 1912."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask what is the purpose of the

Mr. CLAPP. I was going to state it as soon as I had an opportunity. It is to amend the resolution which provided for the creation of a special committee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate the matter of campaign contributions. The original resolution authorized the committee to take up the question of contributions in the campaigns of Subsequently it was amended to include the 1904 and 1908. primary or preliminary campaigns of 1912, but it does not cover the presidential campaign of 1912. I think, for the purpose of comparison in the report the committee will probably make, they should have the statements of 1912. I wish to be frank about it. I expect possibly that we will take some testimony with reference to the campaign of 1912.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.
Mr. OLIVER. Do I understand the Senator from Minnesota to offer this as coming from the committee?

No, sir; I offer it as coming from myself. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. POMERENE. I ask to have the resolution read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio ask that the original resolution may be read, or the resolution now proposed?

Mr. POMERENE. The amendment proposed.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. OLIVER. I think it had better go over. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I move that, notwithstanding the objection, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the resolu-

Mr. GALLINGER. That can not be done under the rule, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Senator from Minnesota that under the rule, when an objection is made, a resolution just offered must go over.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand the rule. I made the motion;

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit a resolution and call the attention of the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] to it. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Mr. Jackson be assigned to service on and to the chairmanship of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of State, and to service on the Committees on Manufactures, Mines and Mining, the Philippines, Public Buildings and Grounds, and Public which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That Senator Robert L. Owen, of Oklahoma, be assigned to the chairmanship of the Committee on Indian Depredations:

That Senator Benjamin F. Shively, of Indiana, be assigned to the chairmanship of the Committee on Pacific Railroads;

That Senator James A. O'Gorman, of New York, be assigned to the Committee on Foreign Relations;

That Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, of Florida, be assigned to the Committee on the Judiciary;

That Senator Kintland I. Perky, of Idaho, be assigned to the following committees: Education and Labor, Civil Service and Refrenchment, Industrial Expositions, Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, and Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to the following agreement:

That on Tuesday, January 21, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, the Senate shall proceed to vote upon Senate joint resolution No. 78, with all amendments that have been or may be offered, without further debate, provided that the mover of any amendment may speak upon it for not to exceed 10 minutes and each other Senator not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. REED. We could not hear in this part of the Chamber.

Will the Senator kindly restate the matter?

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not hear the Senator from Missouri. Mr. REED. There seems to be confusion on the other side of the Chamber also. I ask the Senator if he will kindly restate the proposition? We could not hear him in my immediate vicinity.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is that on Tuesday, January 21, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, the Senate shall proceed to vote upon Senate joint resolution No. 78—that being the joint resolution for the proposed amendment to the Constitution rendering ineligible for election one who has once held the office of President-together with all amendments that have been or may be offered to the resolution, without further debate, provided that the mover of any amendment may speak upon it for 10 minutes, and that each other Senator may speak upon it for not to exceed 5 minutes.

I make the last provision because it is our experience that amendments offered after we begin to vote, without the opportunity for explanation, are often misunderstood. I take it for granted that substantially the whole debate upon the joint resolution has already taken place. I ask this unanimous consent because, if it is not granted, I shall feel it my duty to very soon insist upon the continuous consideration of the joint resolution until we reach a vote.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I presume that request does not preclude the right of discussion between now and the time of taking the vote?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, certainly not. We have more than two weeks' opportunity for debate between now and then; the joint resolution will come up every day automatically at 2 o'clock, and any debate that is desirable can go on during the two weeks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the request of the Senator from Iowa.

The Secretary. It is that unanimous consent be given that on Tuesday, January 21, 1913, at not later than 4 o'clock p. m., the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the resolution, Senate joint resolution 78, and that before adjournment on that

Mr. CUMMINS. That is not the agreement for which I ask. I believe that we ought to fix a definite time to vote, so that Senators can all be here; and, inasmuch as the debate has largely taken place

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the request was that the vote be taken without further debate, except that upon an offered amendment the mover might have five minutes in which to discuss the same.

Mr. CUMMINS. That the mover might have 10 minutes and any other Senator not to exceed 5 minutes in which to reply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That any other Senator shall have not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the request of the Senator from Iowa. It seems to me that if this important question is to be taken up on that date, the order should provide that it should be taken up at an earlier hour in the day, say immediately after the morning business.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Nebraska will permit me to say that the joint resolution will come up every day at 2 o'clock and will be open for debate. It will come up on that day at 2 o'clock and will continue, if any Senator desires to discuss it, until 4 o'clock. I have fixed a definite time for beginning to vote because I know that every Senator wants to be here when the vote is taken, and my observation is that it is a great deal better to fix a definite hour than to leave the matter undetermined.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We know by experience that that will probably result simply in an active and general discussion confined to the day for which the unanimous consent is given; and it seems to me that two hours debate, from 2 to 4 o'clock,

Simmons Smith, Ga. Smoot

Sutherland Swanson Thornton Townsend Works

is too limited. The debate which would occur after 4 o'clock would be almost negligible.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not agree with the Senator that the debate will be delayed until that time; I think there will be some debate upon the matter between now and then.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was going to say

Mr. CUMMINS. Any Senator will have the right to insist upon the consideration of the joint resolution every day after the morning hour has expired.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will yield to me-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do. Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I rise to state that I agree with him, and that I think the hour ought to be earlier. It is a certainty that during the next week we shall not have an opportunity to consider the unfinished business, inasmuch as the impeachment proceedings will doubtless continue during that week, and I apprehend that we have no certainty that they will not go beyond the next week. There may not be much opportunity to debate the question between now and the time the Senator suggests. I want very much to accommodate the Senator in his request. I think we ought to take this matter up and vote on it; and I think if the Senator would make the hour 3 o'clock in place of 4 o'clock it would be better.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am perfectly willing to do so. choice so far as the hour is concerned, and if the date I have named is too early I am quite willing to postpone it until another day.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it seems to me-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to object to the consideration of the joint resolution or to fixing a time to vote upon it, although I am opposed to the measure; but I should like, if the Senator from Iowa would consent, to have a later date fixed, and I would like very much that we should have the same agreement which we have had heretofore with reference to voting before the close of the legislative day. My experience here has been that when the Senate agrees to vote at a certain hour debate is always cut off before those who desire to participate in it on that particular day have concluded, and especially would I like to have a later date fixed, because I am quite sure I shall not be able to be here at that particular time.

Of course, if the Senator from Idaho will Mr. CUMMINS. not be here upon that day, I am very far from insisting upon fixing that time to vote. Will the Senator from Idaho suggest a day that will be convenient?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President— Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Will the Senator from Nebraska

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] suggests to me that he would like to have the matter postponed until one of the early days of February. I have no objection

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator from Iowa—indeed, I request—that he will not press the unanimous-consent agreement to-day. There are quite a number of Senators absent from the city, and I will be much gratified if the Senator will just let this operate as a notice. There are a number of very important and sharp differences about the matter between the four-year presidential term and the six-year term even amongst the advocates of the amendment. I am one of those who will be glad to see something done on the line of the proposition, but I should like very much for the Senator to simply let what he has said operate as a notice and not now press the exact date, in view of the absence of so many Senators from the Chamber. In a few days he can bring up the matter, and I am sure that we shall reach some conclusion that will be satisfactory to him.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well. I understand, of course, that a request of that kind is equivalent to a command. I very gladly accede to it, and I will say to the Senator from Virginia that very soon—whenever it seems to be agreeable to Sena-tors—I will again ask to have a day fixed to vote upon the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Senator from Iowa withdraws his request?
Mr. CUMMINS. I withdraw the request at this time.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed. Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 19115, known as the omnibus claims bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Crawford] to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts

[Mr. Lodge]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I ask that the reading of the amendment to the amendment be resumed. It has only been read in part. I desire to have the reading finished.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment to the amendment at the top of page 17 and read to the end of line 12 on page 74.

I suggest the absence of a quorum. Mr. SMOOT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Crawford Culberson Cullom Curtis Dillingham Ashurst Bacon Myers Nelson Oliver Page Borah Bourne Bradley Page Paynter Perkins Perky Pomerene Reed Richardson Fletcher Gallinger Hitchcock Johnson, Me. Brown Burnham Burton Catron Chamberlain Jones Clark, Wyo. Crane Kern La Follette Sanders

Mr. ASHURST. My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is detained from the Chamber by reason of a slight illness, which illness has been brought upon him by assiduous attention to public business

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr.

OVERMAN] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent on business authorized by the Senate.

Mr. KERN. I again announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has been called from the city on account of a death in his family.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unable to attend the session of the Senate because of absence from the city

Mr. JONES. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. Poin-DEXTER] is absent from the city on important business.

Mr. PAYNTER. I desire to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Johnston] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. OLIVER. My colleague [Mr. Penrose] is necessarily absent from the city for the day.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to state that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Clarke], the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Martine], and the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] are detained from the Chamber on business of the

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. Bryan] is necessarily absent from the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names; not a quorum. The list of absentees will be called.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. Dixon, Mr. Martin of Virginia, and Mr. Smith of Maryland, answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CATRON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. Fall] is necessarily absent on business of the Senate.

IMPEACHMENT OF ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1.30 having arrived, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] will please take the chair to preside over the impeachment proceedings.

Mr. BACON took the chair as Presiding Officer.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON) having announced that the time had arrived for the consideration of the articles of impeachment against Robert W. Archbald, the respondent appeared with his counsel, Mr. Worthington, Mr. Simpson, Mr. Robert W. Archbald, jr., and Mr. Martin.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives appeared in the seats provided for them.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the Journal of the last session of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

The Secretary read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, December 19, 1912, of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any inaccuracies in the Journal? If not, the Journal will stand approved. Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, by some inadver-tence a document which was admitted in evidence and which it was agreed should be printed in the body of the hearings has not been printed. I refer now to pages 986 and 987. There were three reports which it was agreed should be admitted and printed on page 986—Mr. Merriman's report, Mr. Saum's report, and Mr. Rittenhouse's report. By some inadvertence the Rittenhouse report was not printed in the Recorp, and I desire, Mr. President, to have that correction made, and that it be now printed in the RECORD, conformably to the agreement had in the hearing heretofore.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I had noticed the same omission and intended to make the same request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the manager desire that the part which has been printed shall be reprinted, or that the document to which he refers shall be added?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I ask that it be printed as a part of to-day's proceedings. I think what I have said in that connection will enable anybody who wants to examine the testimony to refer it back to the proper place into which it should be read into the record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be ordered accordingly. The report is as follows:

SCRANTON, PA., March 30, 1912.

REPORT ON THE KATYDID CULM DUMP.

The culm dump, known as the Katydid, is situated in the Borough of Moosic, Lackawanna County, and State of Pennsylvania. The dump was made during the years of 1888'to 1908, and contained the buck-wheat coals that were a waste product until they became marketable, the larger size (No. 1) being the first to be marketed and the others following in order as the years rolled by.

The dump was made in the shape of a crescent to take advantage of good dumping ground. After this was made and the buckwheats in it became marketable, the Katydid owners added a washery to their plant, and not only treated the small sizes as they were made in the breaker but also began to wash this bank, as shown on the sketch where the pile has been nearly cut in two, when they stopped because of the burning of the breaker and washery.

We have made a survey of the dump and find the contents, in cubic feet, to be as below:

 Culm (treatable), 3,133,632 cubic feet gross tons
 74,081

 Slush, 1,344,391 cubic feet do
 31,782

Water supply is another item that would make it more favorable for the Erie, as any other party operating would have to have his own separate supply and also separate slush dam. Having their own transportation would add to the profits of the Erie.

As to the "Laurel line." This company could not handle the material in the same way, but would have to put a swinging scraper line at the dump and another from the dump to a point near their tracks, where they would have to erect a small washery and accessories. It would be valuable to them, as they have to buy their fuel, and being in the transportation business, it would help them. At the same time it would be more expensive for them to operate the washery than it would be for the Erie, though they would get their fuel cheaper than at present, provided they could get the dump for a reasonable price.

To an outsider, one not engaged in the transportation business, it would be more expensive than to either of the transporting companies, especially if he had to be tied up by a 65 per cent contract, and for the following reasons: Culm banks made about the same time this was run about 45 per cent to 50 per cent in the different buckwheat sizes.

The bulk of the product is in No. 2 and No. 3. Prices for these the past year, based on the 65 per cent contract, have been for No. 2. 55 cents and for No. 3. 30 cents. Later in the year 70 cents for No. 2 and for No. 3. If a flat rate of 25 cents or 30 cents per ton for royalty or cost at a purchase had to be take into consideration, this, with the cost of handling and preparation plus cost of construction to be charged off for depletion and short life of washery, would make it a losing proposition to any individual operating it. The 65 per cent contract, for instance, made a freight charge of $1.30 tidewater for No.

buckwheat and $1.54 for No. 2.

As to prices paid for culm piles, either by purchase outright or on a royalty basis, flat rate or silding scale, I have to say that leaving out the recent wild prices paid, due to i days. It is one of the best dumps in the valley and was leased to the Scranton Traction Co, as a fuel proposition. It is not made a washery proposition.

Another dump made by this same Mr. W. H. Richmond, but in later years (1884 to 1895) was leased at a flat rate of 30 cents to the Central City Coal Co. in 1907, and, though favorably situated for local city trade, but no railroad facilities, it was a losing proposition.

The Carbon Hill dump along the Lackawanna & Bloomsburg Railroad and the Lackawanna River, a few miles below this city, sold for practically a cash price of 50 cents per ton in the fall of 1911.

During the past year or so the finer culm, such as would pass through the standard mesh of $\frac{1}{2}$ of an inch, has begun to show market value. This, passed over a 3/64 mesh, is successfully used as a fuel at the Oxford mines in this city, and I am informed that the D., L. & W. are using the fine stuff, such as barley coal and finer, very successfully in some of the specially constructed boiler plants. This being the case, what has been in the near past a waste product will probably in the near future be utilized as a fuel without treatment.

If this late waste product is soid instead of having to take care of it and the 65 per cent contract is cut out, it will be a close question as to just what would be a fair flat rate of royalty on this pile. Until such time as I can test the pile for the percentage of the different sizes, I would say from 25 cents to 30 cents per gross ton for the merchantable coal in the bank would be all it would be possible for a selling and nontransporting proposition to bear.

My supplemental report will follow in a short time.

Yours, very respectfully,

J. H. Rittenhouse,

Civil and Mining Engineer.

SCRANTON, PA., April 11, 1912. Mr. WRISLEY BROWN,
Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I herewith submit my supplemental report on the "Katydid" bank.

Number of cubic feet in the bank, as outlined by the Erie_ 3, 133, 632
Additional dump, making 3 in all________681, 229 Total Weight per cubic foot=52.9 pounds.
43.3 cubic feet=1 ton of 2,240 pounds.

_ 90, 186 Total. A test of the component parts of the various sizes in the dump I find as follows:

	Coal.	Waste.	Total.
Sizes above ehestnut	6.086 1.041 12.419 9.893 22.454	Per cent. 2.765 .261 45.080 3.026	Per cent, 8,851 1,302 12,419 9,893 22,454 45,080
Total	51.893	48,106	99,999

This, worked out on the basis of values received for the various sizes according to their percentages, would make the dump figure up in gross receipts, $47.533.

If a $\frac{1}{16}$ -inch mesh were used instead of a $\frac{3}{12}$, as is sometimes done, the per cent reclaimed would be increased by 14.087 per cent, or a total of 65.98 per cent.

Assuming that the bank contains 90,000 tons, we then have the va-

	Tons.
No. 1 Buck No. 2 Buck	937 11, 177 8, 904	at at at	$3.25 $1.78 $1.41 70 cents 30 cents	15, 759, 57
Total	46, 704			47, 533, 18

as it would be a fuel proposition pure and simple, it would not need so much of a plant, and as they consume only about 100 tons a day, the cost of preparation would be greater, or about 20 cents per ton, or $18,000. This, plus the cost of the bank—$27,000—would make $45,000, to which must be added the cost of the necessary plant, or about $5,000, which would be junk at the end of the operation, which would be in about two years. Another item would be the freight cost from the washery to their plant, which, at less than the usual freight charge, would make the cost just about equal to what their fuel costs them. I think they would break just about even.

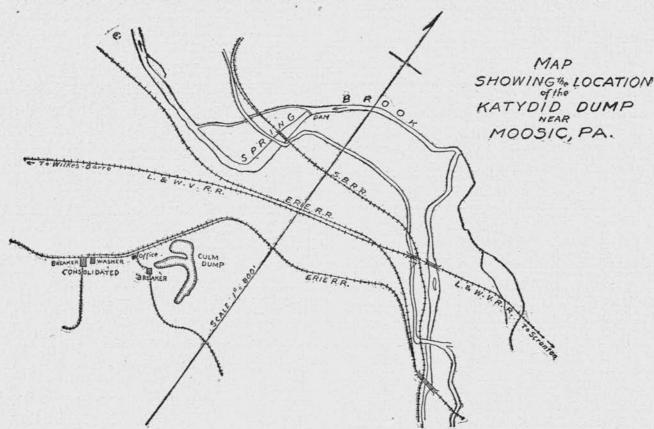

To the individual operator selling his product this party, in my judgment, would fare worse than the "Laurel Line," for if he sold his prepared product, he would have to build more of a plant and greater pocket capacity, costing from $8,000 to $10,000, and, with the same output of 300 tons per day, have pretty much junk on his hands at the end of the year. I would consider this as a losing proposition.

Trusting that I have covered the ground you have outlined for me, I am,

Yours, very respectfully, J. H. RITTENHOUSE.

RELATIVE TO THE OWNERSHIP OF THE KATYDID BANK OR DUMP.

I find Mr. J. M. Robertson claims a half interest or thereabout in the dump under a term he calls "mining rights." He states he has never had a lease, and that there is no lease to him on record; that his only source of title is from certain letters from the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. and verbal agreements had from time to time relative to the several different parcels which he was given the right to mine. He worked his plant from 1887 to 1908 under the above agreements. Since the breaker and washery burned, the property has been virtually abandoned.

He claims that most of the coal came from the Caldwell lot, owned wholly by the H. C. & I. Co., adjoining lot No. 46, which is jointly owned by the Everhart estate and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., and these coals were of course mixed and put on a common dump, said dump being on lot No. 46.

This property was mined and operated for over 21 years, and vouchers made and accepted without question. I understand royalties were paid on "prepared" sizes or for chestnut coal and larger sizes, but no royalty on pea coal and smaller sizes. The relative proportion of the different interests represented in the dump could be determined from the vouchers paid for coal mined from the different tracts.

The Hillside Coal & Iron Co. has given an option for its interest (supposed to be one-half) in the dump, not specifying what that interest is. Mr. Robertson states he thinks his interest should be about the same as that of the company, but has given an option for a less amount than that given by the company, which I am informed is for $5,000.

The Eric Co. could possibly go ahead and put this coal through their washery and no questions be raised, yet this may not be possible. The Everhart estate, owning an individual one-half interest, gets no payment for the small sizes. Coal from other lands has been dumped on land in which they have a half interest in the surface and coal, and since the question of ownership has been raised they would quite likely have something to say.

I find on investigation that there is no lease recorded from the Everhart to the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. and that they never had any, nothing more than a letter, which can not be found. This may account for Mr. Robertson having similar conditions to work under.

In order to determine the exact conditions, a detailed investigation would have to be made, not only as to the title, but also as to the proportions due each. I am in get the tangle straightened out, but with the small amount involved, and the numerous heirs, making the amount due each small, there is not much likelihood of its being pushed with vigor.

J. H. RITTENHOUSE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the respondent ready to proceed?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes, Mr. President. We will recall Mr. Brownell.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE F. BROWNELL-RECALLED.

George F. Brownell, having heretofore been duly sworn, being recalled, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I have called you back for the purpose of asking you one question, and that is to what extent, if at all, did you hear anything about the result of Judge Archbald's visit to Mr. Richardson when you took him to Mr. Richardson's office and left him there; what, if anything, did you hear about the matter after that, until after these charges against Judge Archbald became a matter of newspaper publication?—A. I knew nothing of what occurred between Mr. Richardson and Judge Archbald or as to the result of their conversation until some time in the following May, when I had a talk with Mr. Richardson and about the same time with Capt. May. That was subsequent to the institution of the inquiry before the House Judiciary Committee, and this was just prior to the occasion when I and Mr. Richardson requested that we be given an opportunity to appear before that committee and make a statement. Preliminary to that Mr. Richardson accompanied me there, leaving a sick bed for the purpose, and told me what occurred. That was the first information I had in regard to it.

Q. Between the time you took Judge Archbald to Mr. Richardson's office and left him there, as you have already testified, and the conference you had with him in May, shortly prior to the inquiry before the Judiciary Committee, had you heard about the matter from any source?—A. Not subsequent to the 4th day of August, until a date about the middle of April, when sults of it; but subsequent to the middle of April I did have conversation with various people as to what information I had

Q. I do not care to ask you about anything that happened after the newspaper publications.—A. I was trying to make a distinction between the time in April, when I saw newspaper reports, and the time in May, when I had a conversation with Mr. Richardson and Capt. May in regard to what occurred between them.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, gentlemen. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Have the managers any cross-

Mr. Manager HOWLAND. No cross-examination, Mr. WORTHINGTON. We will call Judge Knapp. TESTIMONY OF MARTIN A. KNAPP.

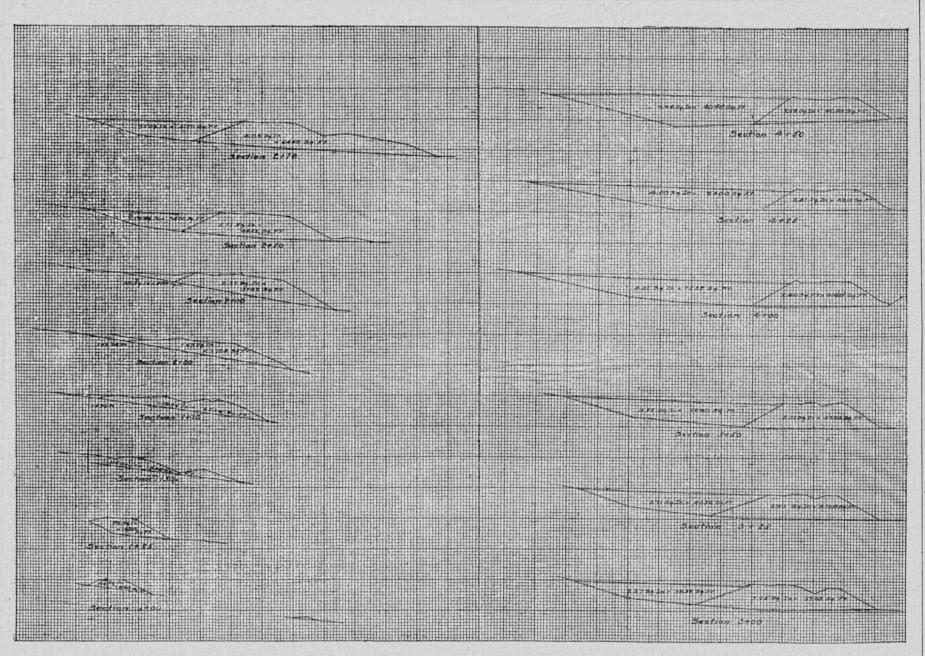

Martin A. Knapp, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

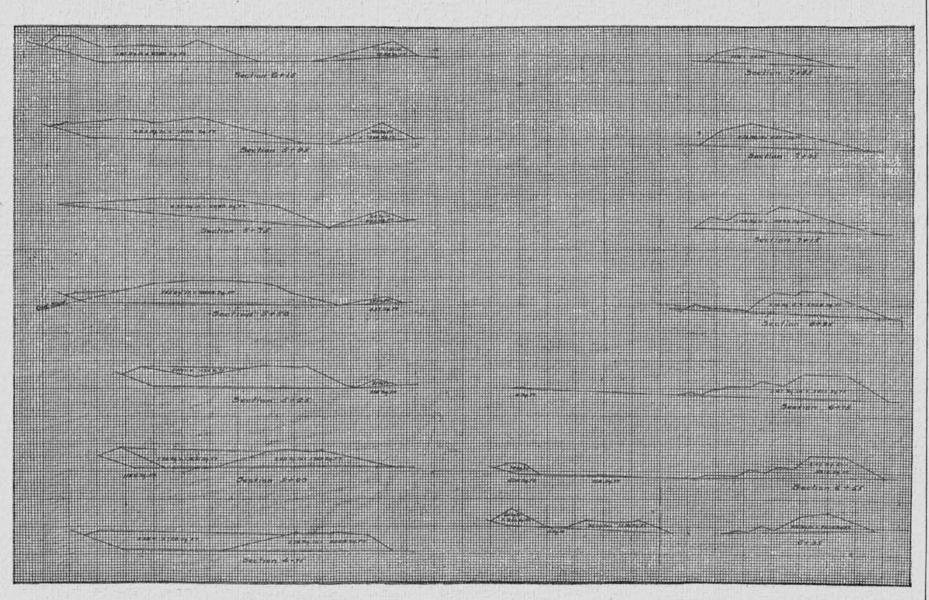

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) You are the president judge of the Commerce Court, and have been since its creation, have you not?-A. I have.

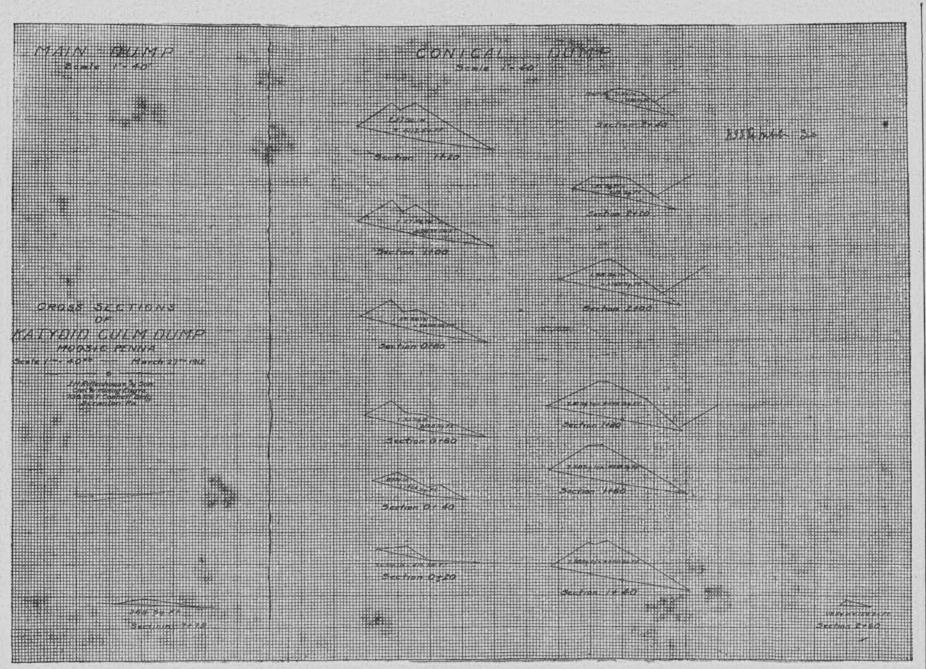

Q. Do you remember the case of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. against the Interstate Commerce Commission?—A.

Q. I hand you a printed copy of the opinion of the Commerce Court in that case. Will you kindly indicate the portion of that opinion which was written by you?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I did not hear the question. I should like to hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Reporter will read the question.

The Reporter read as follows:

I hand you a printed copy of the opinion of the Commerce Court in that case. Will you kindly indicate the portion of that opinion which was written by you?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. We object to that as immaterial. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel will please indicate the purpose for which the testimony is offered.

Mr. SIMPSON. The Presiding Officer will recall that the managers introduced evidence here showing various letters written by Judge Archbald to Mr. Bruce and the replies made by Mr. Bruce to Judge Archbald in connection with this particular case Those letters referred to two certain questions. The inference growing from the article of impeachment is that Judge Archbald obtained information in relation to these two particular matters, which particular information thus obtained found its way into the opinion of the court as the result of that correspondence.

We propose to prove by the testimony of Judge Knapp that the parts of the opinion which related to that matter were written by him and not by Judge Archbald, and that he had no knowledge at all in relation to that correspondence.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, the contention of the managers has not gone to the extent that counsel has indicated. I think it is immaterial even what was the decision of the court in the case. It is certainly immaterial who wrote the opinion.

The charge made in this case is that Judge Archbald invited one of the attorneys to file practically a brief, to reargue or at least to argue some of the propositions involved. That is as far as we go. We think that is improper and a misbehavior. Now, how the case finally terminated or who wrote the opinion we think entirely immaterial, as far as the conduct of Judge Archbald is concerned in the particular charge we make.

Mr. SIMPSON. If the managers, sir, disclaim that the writing and the receipt of those letters had anything to do as affecting the opinion of the court in that case, then, of course, this evidence becomes immaterial.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. We will not disclaim that.
Mr. SIMPSON. Very well. Then, that being so, I have the right to show, I submit, sir, that the writing and receipt of those letters had nothing to do with the opinion in the case, because Judge Knapp himself wrote that portion of the opinion, and he had never heard of the letters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does counsel propose to go further and show that no other judge other than Judge Knapp was instrumental in arriving at that conclusion?

Mr. SIMPSON. I propose to show that no other judge than Judge Knapp had anything to do with writing the opinion which related to these two subjects matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The inquiry of the Presiding Officer was whether counsel proposed to go further and show that no other member of the court had anything to do with the conclusion arrived at by the court.

Mr. SIMPSON. I do not see, sir, how I could go to that extreme, because there are five judges of the court, and it was necessary, of course, that at least three of the judges should coincide in the judgment attained. But we do propose to show that no other judge of the court had any knowledge of any kind of these letters, and that Judge Knapp, who wrote that part of the opinion, which related to those subjects matter, never heard of the letters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the evidence is not material to the charges made in the articles of impeachment. The decision of the Chair is always subject to the higher decision of the Senate, if the Chair is in

Mr. SIMPSON. My colleagues seem to think that I have not made clear to you, sir, that none of the other judges knew of the writing or receipt of those letters. I thought I had made that clear. My colleague, Mr. Archbald, calls my attention to the fact that in the opening by Mr. Manager Clayton this language was used. I read from page 104 of the record:

On February 28, 1912, this case was decided by the Commerce Court in favor of the railroad company. Judge Archbald wrote the opinion of the majority, which followed the views expressed by Bruce, and Judge Mack dissented. The attorneys for the Interstate Commerce Commission and the United States were given no opportunity to examine and answer the arguments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the charge to be one of personal impropriety, official impropriety on the part of the respondent, and the Chair does not think this material evidence.

Mr. SIMPSON. Under the ruling of the Chair there is no need for the further retention of this witness, sir.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to have this question propounded to the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska desires a question propounded to the witness, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Did Judge Archbald communicate to you or to other members of the court sitting in conference on this case the fact that he had communicated with one of the attorneys in the case and received from him certain argument or information relating to the case?

The WITNESS. He did not.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We will call Mr. Hill.

TESTIMONY OF FRANK A. HILL.

Frank A. Hill, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Where do you live?-A. Pottsville, Pa.

Q. What is your business?-A. Coal.

Q. In what way are you or have you been in the coal business?—A. I have charge of the mining department of the Madeira, Hill & Co.

Q. Did the Madeira, Hill & Co. have anything to do with what is known as the Oxford dump, which has been referred to here?—A. Yes; they operate the washery of the Oxford Coal Co.

Q. How long ago did they begin that operation?—A. I do not know. I have known of it for four and one-half years.

Q. In connection with the operation of the Oxford dump, did you at any time have occasion to consider making application for a lease of what is known in this case as the Packer No. 3 dump, belonging to the Girard estate?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is a letter in evidence in this case on page 659; you are familiar with that letter?-A. It is my letter of March 26.

Q. Your letter of March 26 to Mr. Warriner ?- A. Yes.

Q. Relating to No. 4?—A. No. 4 bank. Q. And No. 2, at the end of the letter?—A. A proposition to work No. 4 and a mention of No. 2.

Q. I wish you would go ahead and state what you had to do, if anything, in connection with any project for getting No. 3, the one that is involved here; how that arose.—A. In September, 1911, Col. James Archbald, the engineer of the Girard estate, called my attention to that bank and the possibility of our operating it. I looked it over very casually and made an application to the Girard estate for it.

Q. And when you looked it over were you in company with anybody else?-A. Mr. Archbald, Mr. Weller, and Mr. Klock, of Shenandoah.

Q. Who is Mr. Weller?—A. Mr. Weller is inspector for the Girard estate.

Q. After you had looked it over, you say you made an application for No. 3?—A To the Girard estate; yes, sir.
Q. Go on, then, and tell the story along until Judge Archbald gets into it .- A. We learned from the Girard estate it was their purpose not to make any change in their lessee, and the matter dropped.

Q. You are familiar, of course, with the Oxford dump that your company has been washing for several years?-A. Very.

Q. Have you made an examination of Packer No. 3 dump? . I would not call it an examination. I walked over the top of the bank.

Q. Had you any thought of making an application for No. 3 Packer, the one involved in this case, until Col. James Archbald made an application?-A. I had not.

Q. Did he give you any reason for making the application, anything as to the probability of its being operated by the Lehigh Valley or by the Girard estate itself?—A. He created the impression in my mind that he thought the Lehigh Valley would not operate it.

Q. Do you remember when it was that you made that application?—A. The formal application was made in November, 1911.

Q. Was that in writing or verbal?-A. It was in writing.

Q. Have you a copy of it with you?-A. I have.

Q. I should like to see it, please.

(The paper was produced and handed to counsel and then to the managers.)

Mr. Manager WEBB. What is the purpose of this letter, Mr.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The purpose is to finish out the story which was started by the managers. The managers themselves put in evidence the application that was made by Madeira, Hill & Co. to Packer No. 3, and that with the application of Madeira, Hill & Co. to Judge Archbald and his associates are referred to in the proceedings of the Girard estate. I think we ought to be able to complete what they began and make the argument afterwards. We found on the page I have already referred to the application of this company for two of these

Mr. Manager STERLING. On what page?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. On page 659. The application dated March 26, 1911, made by this company—Madeira, Hill & Co. to Warriner was put in evidence by the managers, and also the answer given by Mr. Warriner on behalf of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I have no objection to the letter going in for what it is worth.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. Let it be marked, and let the Secretary read it, please.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit BB.]

OXFORD, November 27, 1911.

Mr. George E. Kirkpatrick, Superintendent Girard Estate, Philadelphia.

Mr. George E. Kirkpatrick,

Superintendent Girard Estate, Philadelphia.

Dear Sir: As you are aware, the amount of coal that still remains in the Oxford bank is being rapidly depleted with the large tonnages that we are putting out, and the consequence is that it would appear that we have hardly a year's work still before us, providing the present rate of output is continued. At the exhaustion of this bank, if there are no further supplies for us in the way of coal, the plant will go to pieces, and as it has paid large royalty to your estate and no profit to us as operators so far we are extremely anxious to prolong the life in the hopes of getting remuneration and a return on our investment.

A year or so ago we informally spoke to you and made application for the No. 4 Packer bank, if that could be obtained by release from the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., and we now also desire to make further application and enter a specific one for the No. 3 bank, which we understand is not being operated and does not now look as if it would be by the present tenants.

While this bank is not so desirable as the No. 4, it would temporarily enable us to keep our operation going until some other decision might be reached by your board or some other coal found available with which to feed our plant.

This No. 3 bank we could arrange to handle through our Oxford plant, and as our necessities in the way of supplies are getting to be so urgent, I beg to ask your consideration of this application as soon as the matter is one which you can take up. We think the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. would release this bank, as we can not see that it is of any interest to them. The No. 4 bank would be more desirable and convenient for us, and we hope eventually that our application for this may be considered favorably also.

Very truly, yours,

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Hill, how, if you know, did the royalties which you were paying on this Oxford dump, and to which you referred in that letter, compare with the royalties generally that the Lehigh Coal Co. was paying?-A. They were lower.

Q. Are you able to make any comparison between No. 3 and the Oxford dump?-A. In what way?

O. As to which was the more valuable?-A. It would be only an impression.

- Q. It is an opinion based on your own experience of it?— A. It is an opinion based on observation of the outside of the
- Q. Well, what is your opinion based upon that?-A. I think 4 is a better bank than 3.

Q. You think No. 4 is better than No. 3?-A. I think so.

- Q. There are two No. 4s, I suppose you know .- A. I speak of Big 4 and Big 3.
- Q. My question related to a comparison between Oxford and No. 3 .- A. I think Oxford and No. 3 are about the same. know the Oxford bank thoroughly and I only saw No. 3 from the outside.

Q. Did you get any reply to the application which has just been read?—A. Verbally, I think; no written reply.
Q. What was it?—A. That it was the intention of the Girard

- estate not to change their lessees-not to take the bank from the Lehigh Valley.
- Do you remember that anything was said about their waiting until new leases were made, the lease of the Lehigh Valley then being about to expire?—A. Nothing positively. Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Hill, did you know at the time you made the application which has just been read from the desk, dated November 25, 1911, that Judge Archbald had also made application for Packer No. 3 and had obtained the consent of the Lehigh people for it?—A. I think I knew he had made application, but I knew nothing beyond that.

Q. Did you know he had obtained the consent of the Lehigh people to release it?-A. I did not ..

Your investigation of Packer No. 3 extended only to merely walking over it?-A. That is all,

Q. And for those reasons you think the Oxford and Packer No. 3 are about the same in quality?-A. I do.

Q. That is the only means of ascertaining the quality of No. 3 that you used, just looking at it?-A. That is all.

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire. He is

TESTIMONY OF HENRY J. WELLER,

Henry J. Weller appeared and, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Where do you live?—A. Gir-ardville, Schuylkill County, Pa.

Q. What is your occupation?-A. Mine inspector for the Girard estate.

Q. How long have you been mine inspector for that estate?-

A. Ten years.

Q. And in a general way your duties are what?—A. To see that the coal is mined out as thoroughly as possible; to get all the benefits from all the coal on the estate as thoroughly as

Q. To keep things moving, eh?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have any particular acquaintance with the dump known here as Packer No. 3 and the other Packers?—A. I know them well.

Q. What way have you for being so well acquainted with them?-A. We have been at them frequently and tried to get them worked. We have been trying to get them worked, so as to get the coal reclaimed that was contained in those banks.

Q. I would like to know what you have had to do with the negotiations, as we know here, what went on for the purchase or leasing of Packer No. 3 dump, both on the part of Maderia, Hill & Co. and Judge Archbald and his associates.-A. The eastern No. 4 bank was going to be covered by a new rock bank that they were making at Packer 4.

Q. I will ask you to go back to the map and show the location of these Packer dumps and the Oxford dump. You will find a pointer there. Please stand to one side a little and indicate the positions so that all may understand them .- A. The Lehigh Valley Coal Co. worked Packer 4.

Q. Where is that?—A. It is located there [indicating]. put a trestle across the Ashland branch of the Lehigh Valley Railroad and were making a big fill of rock between the creek and the railroad. That fill of rock is extending east and getting around that bank.

Q. Before you go on, please indicate where the Oxford dump is.—A. This is the bank [indicating]. This is the washery.
Q. Where is No. 3?—A. No. 3 is just a little to the east of Eastern Packer No. 4.

Q. Where is eastern No. 4?—A. Right there [indicating].

Q. Where is No. 4 proper?-A. No. 4 proper is here [indicatingl

Q. Where is No. 2?-A. No. 2 is here [indicating] on the extreme west end.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, one of the Senators the other day called attention to the indefinite manner of this testimony as it appears in the record when referring to a map or The witness is referring to this point here and that point there in such a way that the record will be entirely unintelli-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel for the respondent will please note the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio and endeavor to remedy the difficulty by the character of the questions propounded to the witness

(By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) To begin again, in what way is what is called the Oxford washery named on this map?—A. This is the Oxford washery [indicating].

Q. The name Oxford washery is used there?—A. Yes, sir. Q. As to Packer 4 dump, what is the legend on the map?—A.

We call this west No. 4 bank [indicating]. Q. That is the legend on it?—A. Yes.

Q. The legend on Packer No. 3 is what?—A. Packer No. 3 colliery bank.

Q. And eastern Packer 4?—A. Eastern Packer 4. Q. You referred to a creek. How is that named?—A. The Shenandoah Creek.

Q. It is so named on the map?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Go ahead with the story.—A. They built a trestle across the Ashland Branch, and so filled this place between the creek and that bank.

Q. Between the creek and what bank?—A. Between the creek and Packer 4 eastern bank. This rock fill will eventually surround that bank. So we were anxious to try to have whatever coal was in there reclaimed before they would cover, and we asked the engineer of the Girard estate to take it up with Mr. Frank A. Hill, or the manager of the Oxford washery, to see what they could win, inasmuch as the bank was not very large.

Q. You asked the engineer of the Girard estate. Who was he?—A. James Archbald, jr.
Q. To take it up with the Oxford washery people and see whether they would not take that?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Very well; go ahead.—A. The bank was not a very rich bank. The Lehigh Valley Coal Co. tried to work into Packer 4. They tried it first in 1903, next in 1904, next in 1906, and next in 1907. In the whole time they only took about 300 cars. The colliery people objected to the condition of the material, and every time they stopped working it.

Q. They could not use it?-A. They could not use it.

Q. Go on .- A. Mr. Hill asked the engineer of the Girard estate to make an estimate showing how much coal was in that bank-

Q. What bank?-A. Eastern Packer 4 bank, with a view of seeing whether it would be worth his while to try to work it. In the meantime this other matter came up.

Q. What other matter?—A. The Archbald matter. In the meantime they applied to the Lehigh Valley, as I understand, for that bank and for Packer No. 3 bank, and Mr. Hill never made his application to the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.

Q. He never made his application?—A. Not for that bank.

Q. Not to the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.?—A. No, sir. Mr. Hill did make application for west Packer No. 4 bank. That was a year or two previous.

Q. Did you go on Packer No. 3 at any time with James Archbald?-A. I went on Packer No. 4, on the culm bank, with James Archbald.

Q. How far is that from Packer No. 3?-A. They are very close, only a few feet dividing them at the base of the bank. It is the same bank. We made some tests to show the quality of coal contained in it and we found a fairly good piece of bank in quality, but surrounded by a later bank, a rock bank. Can you see that encircling it [indicating]?

Q. Around where?—A. It starts there [indicating] and goes around and comes through here [indicating], encircling all the east, south, and southwest side of the bank. So the good part of the bank is surrounded by a poor bank, a rock bank, which contains very little coal. Q. So you have to get the poor stuff away to get at the good?-A. We can not get it without that.

Q. You say you made an estimate?—A. Yes; me made tests. Q. Who are "we"?—A. I had men working with me and doing it. The tests were made under my supervision.

Q Was that report reduced to writing so that we can see what the result was?-A Yes, sir. Q. Where is it?-A. I have a copy of it. It is in my pocket. [Producing paper.]

Q. We would like to have it. That is the test of Packer No. 3?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I should like to have this paper read at the Secretary's desk.

The Secretary proceeded to read the paper.

Mr WORTHINGTON. I am reminded that it is already in evidence, and I do not care about having it repeated.

Mr. Manager WEBB. There is no necessity of repeating it. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The stenographer will please omit what has been read.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Can you give us any information as to whether Packer No. 3 dump could have been worked economically, paying more than the royalties which had to be paid to the Girard estate?-A. In my opinion, not.

Q. Why?-A. We were being surrounded by this rock bank which made it inconvenient to get at the good material which was contained in a portion of the bank.

Q. Aside from the expense of getting at the good material, what was the average product or quantity of coal in the whole dump as compared with the total mass?-A. About 44 per cent.

Q. To what extent can a dump with only 44 per cent be worked economically?—A. If it was a bank that contained 44 per cent coal and did not contain much large rock, it could be worked profitably, but a bank containing much rock, where the large rock was dumped indiscriminately with the finer dirt containing coal, it would make it unprofitable to work.

Q. You would apply that latter proposition to Packer No. 3?—A. I certainly would.

Q. From your knowledge of it?—A. Yes.
Q. Do you know anything about a part of this dump contained in this Packer No. 3 having been put into the creek?-A. About a year or two previous to the time the leasing was taken up they were filling where this new rock dump is now being evidence put in. They were filling in with ashes and silt from the into it.

breaker and from the boiler house. To stop that from getting into Shenandoah Creek they took thousands of cubic feet and dumped it all along the creek for a fill, losing that much indefinitely, because it can never be regained from the ashes that were put behind it.

Q. They took thousands of cubic feet from what bank?-A.

From eastern Packer 4 bank.

Q. Do you know anything about a part of that No. 3 going into a mine and being lost in that way?-A. Yes. There was a large quantity of No. 3 bank taken down into the mine by the mining underneath. As those mine openings caved in, it took thousands of cubic yards of Packer No. 3 into the mine, where it can never be regained.

Q. You notice mark "A" on the map. Can you see it?-A.

Yes, sir.

Q. You know what it is?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about taking a part of bank 4?—A. Yes, sir. The Lehigh Valley Railway Co. wanted to straighten their main track. The bank, or a part, which belonged to Packer No. 3 colliery, was on the northern side of the Ashland branch of the railroad. The Girard estate agreed with the Lehigh Valley Railroad that if the Lehigh Coal Co. would take that dirt into the breaker and reclaim the coal contained in it, there would be no objection to straightening out their tracks, or if they would pay for the coal contained in the dirt bank they could leave the bank there and use it still to straighten out their track. So the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. agreed with the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. that they would load that material into railroad cars and deliver it to the breaker free of charge if they would open up their breaker and reclaim the coal; the Girard estate would get the royalty and they would not need to pay for it and leave it lie on the ground. After trying three or four times to get this coal worked, the coal company every time objected to it on account of some rock contained in it. They finally abandoned it, and the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. paid for 19,500 tons of coal in that bank, and left it underneath their railroad. Yet that was a much better bank than the other Packer No. 3 bank.

Q. You are familiar, of course, with the Oxford bank?-A. That is one of our collieries.

- Q. That is one as to which you made inquiries?-A. Yes; it is one of the Girard estate banks.
- Q. How does that compare with Packer No. 3?-A. It is about equal.

Q. It is just about the same?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You told me that the percentage of coal in this Packer No. 3 is about 44.-A. About 44.

Q. Was that equally over the whole dump or were parts higher and parts lower?—A. That was the average. The northwest corner was the better and the southern and eastern sides the poorer.

Q. Where the rock is?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, about eastern No. 4, with respect to ashes.—A. Eastern No. 4 had a lot of ash scattered over the bank and through the bank. That was why we questioned if anyone could work that. That was one objection the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. always found. When they took into the breaker the ashes it could not be separated from the coal.

Q. It is harder to separate ashes than other material from coal?-A. It is one of the hardest things to take from coal.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) How long have you been associated with the Girard estate?—A. Ten years,
Q. Have you ever been associated with the Eric Railroad Co., or the Lehigh Valley, or the Philadelphia & Reading?-A. formerly worked for the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. before I worked for the Girard estate.

Q. Immediately before?—A. Immediately. Q. Col. James Archbald is a nephew of Judge Archbald, is he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he knew all about this bank that you now know?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. No. 3 and No. 4?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which the Lehigh Valley people consented to let Judge Archbald have. He knew all that you knew about it?—A. I would not say that he was as thoroughly familiar with it, be-cause he did not get over the ground as often as I did.

Q. Did he not make this report?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And filed it with the Girard estate, showing that eastern Packer No. 4 had 48,000 tons of coal in it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As that report is a matter of evidence, the Chair suggests that it is a waste of time to go Mr. Manager WEBB. I am going to be very brief, I assure you, but I want to show by this witness that Maj. Archbald had as much knowledge about this matter as the witness had himself, and I am only asking questions along that line. [To the witness:] You say this rock bank extends around eastern Packer No. 4

The Witness. Packer 3.

Q. I understood you to point it out on the map. a rock fill or a rock ridge being made by the railroad company around Packer No. 4 eastern. Is that right?-A. Excuse me, I thought you referred to the rock dump that I said was around That is a new one they are making now. That is right.

Q. I am referring to the quantity of rock you spoke of around eastern No. 4 .- A. That is right.

Q. You spoke of a rock bank or fill which would make it impossible for anybody to work that bank No. 4 except the Lehigh people.-A. I do not know whether that is exactly right. The only thing we asked them not to do was not to dump over on the bank and cover it up.

Q. I ask you if they continue making that ridge around there will it not make it practically impossible for anybody to work No. 4, the eastern bank, except the Lehigh Valley people?-A. No; it would not, because the same access to the bank that the Lehigh Valley people would have any person else would have that would want to work it.

Q. Then it can be worked by any person, notwithstanding this rock bank? Is that it?—A. It certainly can be.

Q. Then this rock bank does not affect the value of eastern Packer No. 4, which contains 48,000 tons of coal? Is that right?-A. The new rock bank that is going in there will make it more unhandy to get at, but it will not make it impossible to get at it.

Q. It will make it more unhandy for anybody, but it will not make it impossible?-A. It will not make it impossible; no.

Q. You say there is a rocky ridge or fill extending all around

- or partially around No. 3?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. When was it put there?—A. Before I went with the Girard estate, but this later part of the bank, when Packer No. 3 colliery was working-in later years they do not work Packer No. 3 colliery; they do not prepare coal at Packer No. 3; they take the coal to Packer No. 4 breaker and prepare it—this was a later bank put out before Packer No. 3 was abandoned, about one or two years previous to my going over there. So that would be about 12 years ago.
- Q. What is the size of the rock around Packer No. 3?-A. Some are very large.
- Q. What are the sizes?—A. They are all sizes, from a couple of hundred pounds to the size of your fist.

Q. What is the size of the original rock?-A. The size was very bulky.

Q. Well, how high is it from the base to the top?-A. I have not measured the width or the height.

- Q. You do not know?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Can you say, or is it right, that you do not know what it contains, how high it is, or whether it extends all around the base of Packer No. 3?—A. All around the east, south, and southwest sides.
- Q. That rock was put there, then, after the dump was made, was it?—A. It was put there after the good dirt was put there, The good dirt is the older dirt out of the collieries, because at that time they did not dig the coal so thoroughly out. There was no demand for the smaller sizes, and the older the bank, in almost every instance, the better the bank.

 Q. How high is this ridge of rock that you speak of with reference to the height of culm bank No. 3?—A. A little higher. In making the new bank they came out over the old bank, and I would say it is from 8 to 10 feet higher than the old bank. It was put very high.

Q. It would be necessary, then, to climb up over the rock bank to get out onto the culm bank? Is that your idea?—A. On one side some of the good dirt is exposed, because it did not reach around to the northwest side, to the east, the south, and the southwest side. You would certainly have to go over the rock bank to get at the good dirt bank.

Q. After you made one breach in the rock wall, you could dig it all, could you not?-A. Not without digging the rock.

- Q. I know. But you could dig the rock away from the breach that you made, and then you could move the coal through this breach to your washery?-A. I do not think you
- Q. Your idea is that you would have to dig all the rock away?—A. You would. The bank is very high, and it would rush in on you. You would not have to dig absolutely all, but nearly all.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I think that is all, Mr. President. Redirect examination:

(By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) When you speak of rock around the east, south, and southwest sides of No. 3, do you mean that is all rock?—A. Yes; nearly all rock.

Q. Have you included that when you have given your estimate of 44 per cent of coal on the whole business?—A. That was the average of the whole bank.

Q. What is the proportion of this rock part of the dump, then, to what you call the good part?—A. That is a little hard to determine on account of the new rock dump coming over the top of the good dirt bank. We can not tell how much the good dirt would be in that new rock bank. So it is a little hard to determine that.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the witness is finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN M. HUMPHREY.

John M. Humphrey, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Humphrey, what is your full name?-A. John M. Humphrey.

Q. And your residence?—A. Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am chief mining engineer of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.

Q. How long have you been the chief mining engineer of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.?-A. Since June 1 of last year-1912. Q. Before that time what was your business?-A. I was the division superintendent of the Mahanoy and Shamokin division of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.

Q. We are concerned here just now about these Packer dumps. Were they within your bailiwick before you got your present position?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are familiar with Packer dur Q. How familiar?—A. Very familiar. You are familiar with Packer dumps?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Warriner was your chief, I believe?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any occasion at any time within late years to have any talk with Mr. Warriner on the question of what should be done about Packer No. 3 dump?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?-A. That was a little more than a year ago, I think. It was either in the late fall or early winter of 1911—in November, I think, of 1911.

Q. Did you know anything about applications that had been made for that dump by Madeira, Hill & Co. and by Judge Archbald and some associates of his?—A. Madeira, Hill & Co. never made any application for that dump—for Packer No. 3.

- Q. Not to your company?—A. No, sir.
 Q. Well, you knew about Judge Archbald's having made application?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. As to the conversation that you had with Mr. Warriner that I am talking about, was that before or after you knew about Judge Archbald's application?—A. That was at the time the matter of leasing the dump had been referred to me by Mr. Warriner.
- Q. Now, go on and tell us what you did about it.—A. I made a map and estimated the quantity in the several dumps in the vicinity of our Packer 4 colliery. I then went to Wilkes-Barre, Mr. Warriner's headquarters, with this data, and went over it with him. Shortly after we were together Judge Archbald came in the office, and the Packer No. 3 dump and the Packer No. 4 dump we decided not to lease on account of our working them ourselves at that particular time, but we told the judge that he could have the Packer No. 3 dump-at least, Mr. Warriner told him so.

Q. I know what Mr. Warriner did; we have had him here as a witness; but I should like to know what you did, if anything, about it?—A. Well, what I did was to advise Mr. Warriner as to the character of these dumps and as to their worth to us.

Q. Well, what information did you give him?-A. The packer No. 4 dump we were working and putting through our breaker at that time, and it was my advice not to lease that dump or the Packer No. 2 dump. I advised the leasing of Packer No. 3 on account of its inferior quality and its location, it being located at such a point that we could not take it through our breaker economically for two reasons; one, on account of the distance from the breaker, and, another, we were putting a large rock bank between the breaker and this dump.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I wish you would speak a little londer.

The WITNESS. The No. 2 dump and No. 4 dump were both removed from the discussion, leaving only the No. 3 dump, and the reason for that was because No. 3 dump was of no value to us, or at least we considered it so, it being too far from our operation, for one thing, to make it economical to rework, and, another, we were putting a large rock bank between our operation and the dump that would make it very expensive for us to remove that dump to the breaker.

Q. Did you give that advice to Mr. Warriner while Judge Archbald was there or before or after he was there?—A. I gave it to Mr. Warriner before the judge came in.

Q. Did you participate in the conversation after the judge got there?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, go on and tell what took place then .- A. The banks were generally discussed-the three banks, the No. 2 bank, the No. 4 bank, and the No. 3 bank.

Q. Had you before you the application that Judge Archbald and his associates had made?—A. That was the first I knew of Judge Archbald's application—meeting him in Mr. Warriner's office.

Q. Did you know that there was any No. 4 in that application or any No. 2?-A. No; I did not know that at that time. Q. Not at that time?—A. That the judge wanted the bank there.

Q. Very well. You advised Mr. Warriner, from your knowledge of the business, that it would be to the interest of the company to let Judge Archbald have No. 3, did you?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Excuse me for the question, but I want to know whether you made that honestly and with any thought but the best interests of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. in mind?—A. Certainly I made it with that idea only; that was my only idea.

Q. Now, I wish you would tell us a little more about why you gave Mr. Warriner that advice about No. 3. What kind of a dump was it? Tell us about it.—A. The No. 3 dump had been originally a coal dump; that is, the smaller sizes of coal from the old Packer No. 3 breaker. Afterwards they had dumped rock on this same coal dump, making it very much less valuable as a washery proposition than it would have been had the rock not been dumped there, and consequently there was a very much less percentage of coal in the dump than there was in either of our other dumps. In addition to that, the location of the dump made it a much more expensive proposition for us; and the rock bank I mentioned, which we were dumping between our breaker and the dump, would almost make it impossible for us to get the dump to the breaker.

Q. Now, in your judgment, at the time Judge Archbald was there and that application on his behalf was being made, could Packer No. 3 dump have been worked with any profit by the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., paying the current royalty to the Girard estate?—A. No, sir; it could not have been.

Q. Could anybody do it from that time to this, so far as you know?-A. No, sir.

Q. You have seen the map, have you not, of these dumps?-

A. Yes, sir. Q. Upon which there is a letter "B," which, it has been stated, indicates where a certain hole was. Do you know about that?—A. I can not see the letter "B" from here, but—

Q. On the map it is located between eastern No. 4 and Packer

No. 3. Is that where it is?-A. Yes, sir; there is a hole there. Q. Very well; tell us what you know about that hole .-- A. We drove a hole out there about 1893.

Q. 1893?-A. I should say about 1903, and prepared a small portion of the small No. 4 Packer—Q. "Eastern No. 4," we call it.—A. Eastern No. 4, and during the years from 1904 to 1907 it was worked intermittently, and we put through about a thousand cars altogether. That is a thousand mine cars, which contain about 3 tons each. would be about 3,000 tons of this bank we put through the

Q. Why did you not take more?-A. The reason we did not take more was on account of the quality of the bank. The bank contained a lot of flat slate, which is very difficult of separation; it is very hard to remove from the coal.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any further questions for the witness? If not, he may retire.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to submit a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska presents a question which he desires to have propounded to the witness. The Secretary will read the question.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. What reason was there why your company should let Judge Archbald buy or lease one of its coal dumps?

A. I do not know of any reason why they should let Judge Archbald buy or lease one of their coal dumps any more than any other business man.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any further questions of the witness.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Just one question, Mr. President. [To the witness:] What was the general policy of your company with reference to leasing or selling dumps? Had you at time before that leased or sold dumps?—A. I can not recall any in my division.

Q. Well, you know there were none, do you not, and you know there were none in any division, do you not?-A. No; I do not know that, sir.

Q. You do not know that they did lease any?-A. No; I do not know that they did lease any.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) What had Judge Archbald's connection with the matter to do with your recommending that the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. should allow it to be leased?-A. I did not know that Judge Archbald was the applicant for this dump when I made my recommendation.

You made your recommendation before you knew who was making the application, did you?-A. Exactly.

Q. You were personally in charge of these matters under Mr. Warriner at that time?-A. Yes, sir.

Recross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. Warriner knew who the applicant was, did he not?—A. I think he did, as I read his testimony.

Q. He is the gentleman in authority with reference to the leasing of these dumps?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire, and is excused. TESTIMONY OF JOHN W. BERRY.

John W. Berry, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Berry, you are secretary and treasurer of the Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co., are you not?—A.

Q. And have been how long?-A. Six or eight years.

Q. Do you know the old gravity fill which was leased by that company to Frederick Warnke?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who owned that fill?—A. The Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co.

Q. Who owned the land upon which it was situated?-A.

The Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co.

Q. With whom did you have negotiations in relation to the leasing of it by the Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co. to Mr. Warnke?-A. Well, they started with Judge Archbald, and finally we made a sale to Frederick Warnke.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, I did not hear the answer to that question myself, and I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will speak louder, so that he can be heard over the entire Chamber.

The WITNESS. The negotiations started with Judge Archbald and ended with the sale to Frederick Warnke and his business associates.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Who made the proposition to the Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co., which was accepted, to sell it to Mr. Warnke and his associates?-A. The final proposition was made by Judge Archbald.

Q. I show you certain correspondence. Will you kindly look at it and see if that is a copy of the letters written by you in relation to the matter?—A. (After examining papers.) Yes; this is the correspondence that started away back in regard to an option that ran out on August 1.

Mr. SIMPSON (to the managers). Cross-examine, gentlemen.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. Give us a moment to read the correspondence, if you please.

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) These letters that have been shown you are the only contract or option that was ever given by you to Judge Archbald?—A. That is all.

Q. And such rights as he had under that option——A. Well, there was one on December 2. I offered it to him for $6,000 for 10 days; that was by telephone.

Q. Your initial option to him was given, as demonstrated by this correspondence, on the 27th of April, 1911, and by successive extensions until its expiration, August 1?—A. That is ght. It expired on August 1.
Q. After that time did he hold any formal option from you on the property at all?-A. Only the verbal option given by telephone on December 2 for 10 days.

Q. For what time?-A. For 10 days.

Q. And that was never renewed?-A. No, sir.

Q. So that at the time the deal was made to Frederick Warnke Judge Archbald held no option whatever from your company?-A. There was no option at that time.

Mr. Manager WEBB (to Mr. Simpson). Do you desire to have the letters read?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes; we might as well have them read. offer the letters in evidence, Mr. President, and ask to have them read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the letters, marked "U. S. S. Exhibit CC," as follows: .

[U. S. S. Exhibit CC.]

PITTSTON, PA., April 22, 1911.

PITTSTON, PA., April 27, 1911.

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of yesterday, inquiring about the old gravity fill, received.

Yes; we will sell the coal in the same for cash. I expect to be in Scranton Monday and will try to see you for a few minutes.

Yours fruly Yours, truly,

JOHN W. BERRY.

Hon. R. W. Archbald, Scranton, Pa.

My Dear Sir: Your letter of April 26 received, and in accordance with your request we hereby offer you the coal in the old gravity fill between planes 4 and 5 for $7,500 cash, and will allow two years for its removal. This option to end in two weeks from the date hereof.

I shall be glad if you will let me know as soon as convenient. Two other parties have made application for the fill since I talked with you last Monday, and are awaiting your decision.

Yours, truly,

Secretary and Treasurer the Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co.

PITTSTON, PA., May 11, 1911.

Hon. R. W. Archbald, Scranton, Pa.

My Dear Judge: I have your letter of May 10, 1911, requesting an extension of the option given to you under date of April 27, 1911.

You state the necessity of going to Washington, etc. Your request is agreed to. It would be better, however, for us to fix a time when the option expires, and we hereby extend the option to June 1, 1911.

Yours, truly,

The Lacon & Superes Coal Co.

THE LACOE & SHIFFER COAL CO., JOHN W. BERRY, Secretary.

PITTSTON, PA., May 25, 1911.

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Judge: Your letter of May 23 received, and in accordance with your request we again extend the time of the option on the old gravity fill to June 15, 1911.

We own for a distance of 400 or 500 feet west of the fill and will agree to your floating the refuse into the marsh on the west side and to use such surface land as may be necessary for a washery.

Yours, truly,

THE LACOE & SHIFFER COAL CO., JOHN W. BERRY, Secretary.

PITTSTON, PA., June 17, 1911.

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

DEAR JUDGE ARCHBALD: I have your letter of June 16. You need more time, and we hereby extend the option to July 1, 1911.
Yours, truly,

THE LACOE & SHIFFER COAL CO. JOHN W. BERRY, Secretary.

PITTSTON, PA., July 5, 1911.

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

DEAR JUDGE ARCHBALD: Your letter of July 1 received. We extend the option on the old gravity fill until August 1, 1911.
Yours, truly,

THE LACOR & SHIFFER COAL CO. JOHN W. BERRY, Secretary.

Hon. R. W. Archbald, Scranton, Pa. Pittston, Pa., December 16, 1911.

Dear Judge Archbard, Pa. Hon. R. W. Archbald, Scranton, Pa.

Dear Judge Archbald: Your letter of December 12, 1911, received. I can not answer your letter for a few days for this reason: When you telephoned me on the 2d of the month I offered it to you for 86,000 cash, giving you 10 days. Two or three days after I gave another option at a higher price, to commence at the expiration of your option in case you did not accept the offer within the 10 days. I will know by the latter part of next week whether this party takes it or not.

Yours, truly,

JOHN W. BERRY.

PITTSTON, PA., December 23, 1911.

Hon. R. W. ABCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

DEAR JUDGE ARCHBALD: Your letters of December 18 and 21 received.

I have postponed answering your letter of December 18, hoping to have a definite answer to give you. In case I do not get a definite answer by Tuesday morning I will probably see you in Scranton. However, at the low price I gave you we must have cash.

Yours, truly,

JOHN W. BERRY.

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS). Mr. Berry, have you the letters from Judge Archbald to which these are the replies?-A. Two I sent to Mr Manager Clayton. The others were thrown into the waste basket, when they became of no use, long before this investigation started.

Q. What other letters were thrown into the waste basket?— . Well, the letters that I received from him except those which I sent to Mr. Manager Clayton. Letters dated December 27, 1911, and February 21, 1912, were the two which I sent to Mr. Manager CLAYTON.

Q. You have in your possession no other letters from Judge Archbald?—A. I have no other letters. They were destroyed when they became of no use after that option expired.

Q. So that you have no letters from him in your files at all at this time?-A. Not at this time. Two original ones I sent to you at the time of the examination before the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will you kindly produce those two letters, gentlemen?

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) What is the date when you destroyed those letters?-A. The date of what?

Q. What is the date when you destroyed that correspondence?-A. Oh, it was away back in the summer some time, after August 1.

Q. What year?—A. 1911. Just about that time, I guess.

Q. How did these escape at that time?—A. I do not know. I happened to have them when you wanted them, and so I sent you all I had.

Q. What I am trying to get at is whether there was any reason why you saved some of the letters rather than others. A. No; there was not. They just happened to lie on my desk there, what remained. The others were destroyed in clearing the desk, some time in August, I guess-August or September.

Redirect examination:
(By Mr. SIMPSON.) Are these the two letters you sent to the Judiciary Committee [exhibiting]?—A. (After examination.) They are.

Mr. SIMPSON. I offer these letters in evidence, and ask the Secretary to read them.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit DD.]

SCRANTON, PA., December 27, 1911.

SCRANTON, P.A., December 27, 1911.

My Dear Mr. Berry: I have just seen the party here to whom I was going to turn over the old Gravity Fill at the price which you named. He is not able, however, to make a cash payment for the whole $6,000, the price at which you put it, and if that is essential he will have to give it up. He wishes me to say, however, that if at any time you wish to consider the offer which he made—that is to say, $2,000 cash and the balance in notes, payable at the rate of 20 cents a ton as the material is removed—he will be willing to go into it at any time.

Yours, very truly,

R. W. Archbald.

R. W. ARCHBALD.

(United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

SCRANTON, PA., February 21, 1912.

MY DEAR MR. BERRY: If you have not disposed of the old Gravity Fill, the party here who has been interested in it wishes me to make you another proposition. He will pay you $7,000, provided you will take $2,000 cash and the other $5,000 at the rate of 20 cents a ton for each ton of material removed. This will give you $1,000 more than the $6,000 cash for which you offered to sell, and you would be entirely secure for the balance above the down payment.

Trusting that this will appeal to you,

Yours, very truly.

R. W. Archbald.

R. W. ARCHBALD. Yours, very truly,

(By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Berry, did anyone besides Judge Archbald bring the purchasers and sellers together in that matter?-A. No one else.

Q. There is another question, which I overlooked asking you before. Will you tell us, please, what rights, if any, the Delaware & Hudson Co. have over the surface of that ground?-A. No rights.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any further ques-

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) Does the Delaware & Hudson own any land adjoining this fill?—A. I do not know. I think it is what is called the East Side Bondholders, of which Capt. May is one of the trustees.

Is that an adjunct of the Delaware & Hudson?-A. No; I think not. The East Side Bondholders hold some bonds. think the mortgage was foreclosed and the property got into the hands of the bondholders.

Q. Has it any connection with the Pennsylvania Coal Co.?-I think not.

Q. You closed this transaction with Mr. Warnke in person, did you not?—A. I did; with him and his business associates.

Q. Who are his business associates?-A. Mr. Schlager and Mr. Kiser.

Q. Swingle?—A. Swingle; yes.

Q. They came to your office in person for that purpose, did they not?-A. Yes; they did.

Q. And the final negotiations were conducted between you without the interposition of Judge Archbald?—A. Yes; with one exception. We met once at Judge Archbald's office, after I had made the first draft of the contract and read it over there.

Q. What was the purpose of that meeting in Judge Archbald's office?—A. I do not know. They lived in Scranton and I lived in Pittston, and I frequently go to Scranton, and I think it was probably through my suggestion that we met there, having no other place to meet.

Q. What was the date of that conference?-A. I do not know. It was between February 26 and March 7. On March 7 the contract was signed in my office in Pittston.

Q. In 1911?—A. In 1912 it was signed.

Q. Your ownership or the ownership of the Lacoe & Shiffer Co. of this dump was open and notorious, was it not?-A. Oh, yes.

Q. And there was never any question as to who the parties were with whom negotiations had to be had in order to purchase it?-A. Not the slightest.

Q. And your relation to the Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co. was equally notorious?-A. Yes.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) These East Side bondholders, so called, were a bondholders' committee of bonds on a defunct coal company, were they not?—A. I think so. I do not know enough about it to give you the details, but they are always spoken of as the East Side bondholders.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire and be excused.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Call Mr. Holden.

TESTIMONY OF CHARLES P. HOLDEN.

Charles P. Holden, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

(By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Where do you live?-A. Boston, Mass.

Q. What is your business?—A. Manufacturer of machinery.

Q. Have you at any time had any relation with what is known as the Katydid culm dump near Moosic, Pa.?-A. I have, sir.

Q. Just in what way? Will you tell us briefly how you are concerned in that property?—A. In the latter part of 1911—December, I think—I was in the office of the Laurel line, so-called.

Q. In Scranton?-A. And I saw Mr. Conn. Mr. Conn informed me that they were about to buy a culm dump on 46. Forty-six being a lot that my wife had an interest in, he asked me if I knew anything about it. I said, "Forty-six belongs to the Everhart estate in part."

Q. The Everhart estate?—A. The Everhart estate, of which my wife is a member, her interest being very small, a onetwenty-well, I have forgotten exactly what it is, but it is very small.

I then told him I thought he would make a mistake to buy something that belonged to somebody else. He told me he would drop it.

Q. What did you say was the date of that conversation?—A. In December, 1911. Two or three days after that I went to my attorney, Walter S. Bevan-

Q. In Scranton?-A. In Scranton, and instructed him to see the Brooke people at Birdsboro, Pa.

Q. Who were they?-A. The E. & G. Brooke Co., the owners of a one-fourth full interest in this particular property. He did I sent him there to ask if he could get an option for me, so as to protect Mrs. Holden's interest and the collateral interests. He wrote me under date of December 11 that they were willing under certain conditions to grant me that option. Q. Have you that letter?—A. I have that letter here.

Q. Have you any objection to letting us use it here?-A. It is a private letter, and I do not care to show it unless I have to do so. I think I have it here. I have no objection to showing the letter to the committee. I do not want to show it unless I have to.

Q. You have no objection to showing it to me, in the first place, and to the managers?-A. Not at all, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have seen it before.

(The letter was produced and examined by the managers,) Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Holden, I feel obliged to offer this letter in evidence. It would do no good for counsel and the managers to see it unless the Senators, who have to pass judgment on this case finally, see it. I therefore ask that it be marked as an exhibit and read from the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit EE.]

(Walter S. Bevan, attorney and counselor, Scranton, Pa.)

SCRANTON, PA., December 11, 1911.

Mr. Charles P. Holden, Prince George Hotel, New York, N. Y.

DEAR Mr. HOLDEN: I have just returned from Reading, where I interviewed the Brooke people. While they refused to sign an option to-day, they assured me that they would not give anybody an option until they heard again from me, and I promised to write them Thursday or Friday of this week.

Before signing an option they desired to have a few days to look into their interests there, as they were not familiar with the extent of it. I promised to communicate with them and give them some definite information, and I would therefore request you to answer the following questions, which they put up to me: How much are you willing to pay for an option? For what period of time do you desire the option? What is your proposition as to the purchase of their interest, either outright or upon a royalty basis? If upon a royalty basis, name the sizes and the prices for each size? What is the extent of the tract?

I found them to be very decent people to deal with, and I am sure that if we propose any reasonable terms, that I can secure the option this week. Answer this communication immediately. The gentlemen interested in this land company will be out of town until Thursday or Friday, so that will give us ample opportunity to communicate with them.

Any other data that you think would be useful in my communication to them kindly give to me.

Very truly, yours,

WALTER S. BEVAN.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Now, will you go on with the story?-A. After receiving that letter I went with Mr. Bevan to Birdsboro and had an interview with the Brooke people. They did not know what to say about the property. told them there had been an offer made

Q. I do not care for the details of that conversation. If it resulted in anything I would like to know what the result was.—A. I wanted to bring out that I told them at that time that I understood the Laurel line had offered somewhere like $25,000 for the property to start with. Then Mr. Brooke said he would go with me to see the property. He did go. He went over the property. He did not have it examined at that time, but paced it off. It resulted in my getting an option—it resulted in my buying that interest from the Brooke people.

Q. For how much?—A. I do not care to say; I do not think I ought to say. It is an entirely private matter, and unless I have to do so I do not want to say.

Q. When did you buy their interest?—A. Some time in the summer of 1912.

Q. That was last summer ?- A. Yes. That is, I completed the thing. The option was given to me right after this time in December.

Q. When did you get the option?—A. The 17th of January, 1912, I think.

Q. Anyhow, it was before April, 1912?-A. It was the 17th of January, 1912.

Q. It was before April, 1912?-A. Yes.

Q. That is what I want to lead up to. Go ahead and tell what happened about this matter that brought you finally to Capt. May's office.-A. Having obtained that option, I again saw Mr. Conn on some business of my own, looking to getting a railroad rate on other property.

Q. Something else entirely?-A. Yes, sir. That was my object in seeing Mr. Conn. Mr. Conn told me that the matter had been dropped so far as the Katydid was concerned, and so I supposed the whole thing was dropped, so far as Judge Archbald was concerned or anybody else.

Q. When you say the whole thing was dropped what do you mean?—A. The Katydid.

Q. Dropped by whom?—A. By the Laurel line.
Q. That the Laurel line would not buy it?—A. That the Laurel line would not buy it. I assumed that nobody would buy it, because it seemed to be common news, and everybody in Scranton at that time knew where the ownership lay. It so happened I was in Scranton several times from January until April. This particular day—the 11th day of April—happened to be my birthday. I called at Capt. May's office on business connected with this Everhart estate.

Q. Excuse me, you say the 11th of April. What year?—A.

1912. I went to see Capt. May about lots 20 and 21, which the Everhart estate owned, and from which they mined coal, and also lot 26, of which my wife owns a quarter interest. As I was about to leave Mr. May's office he turned to me and said, "By the way, I have sold the Katydid property." I said, "What do you mean?" He said, "I have sold it; I have sold it to one Bradley.

Q. One Bradley?—A. One Bradley. Said I, "Capt. May, you are taking a great chance. By the way," said I, "I notify you right here not to sell that property. It belongs to Mrs. Holden as far as her interest is concerned, and I have an option on a quarter interest." The property was owned by the Brooke people, one full quarter interest; the Everhart estate, one quarter; and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., one-half interest. The culm dump was an undivided interest and could not be sold in part; the Erie could not sell it; it had to be sold as a whole.

Consequently my notice to Capt. May was that the property could not be sold unless it was sold in its entirety.

I left Scranton on the 12.40 train. A half hour before I left I called up Mr. Heckle, who was the administrator on behalf of part of the Everhart estate. I asked him, on behalf of his people, to notify Mr. May. I sent for my lawyer to come to the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad and asked him to notify Capt. May in writing. I left Scranton on the 12.40 train. I arrived in New York at 4.40, I think.

Q. What, 12.40 in the day?—A. The 11th of April.
Q. The middle of the day, or the night?—A. 12.40 p. m. I arrived in New York at 4.40, I think. As I was about to take the train for Boston, which left at midnight, it occurred to me I had better send Capt. May a written notice for myself. I then went across the street to the Grand Union Hotel and sent him the notice, which appears in the record.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is in evidence.

The WITNESS. On my arrival in Boston I went to the office of Mr. Saltonstall, of the firm of Gaston, Snow & Saltonstall, who represented John Everhart's widow, and got him to notify Mr. May. On my next trip to Philadelphia I saw Mr. Taylor, the husband of Mrs. Holden's sister, and got him to notify Mr. May.

Q. Do you happen to know whether Mr. Taylor is in this country now?—A. Mr. Taylor is in Europe. That was the result of my efforts to notify Capt. May not to sell this undivided interest. He pretended to say he could sell whatever interest he had. So he could; but he could not sell that bank, because it was an undivided interest. Q. You mean now that that is what you told him?-A. That is what I told him; the Katydid bank, or any bank up there on that property.

Q. I want to ask you, at the time you had that conversation with Capt. May on the 11th of April last and at the time you spoke to Mr. Bevan and Mr. Heckle and Saltonstall, what knowledge or suspicion you had, if any, of any connection of Judge Archbald in that matter?—A. I never heard of it, sir.

Q. What knowledge or suspicion had you at any time of any investigation that was impending in reference to Judge Archbald's connection with the Katydid or anything else?-A. Not in the slightest degree. I never heard of it.

Q. Had you any reason, except what you have stated, for giving or having those notices given?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you happen to know anything about the sale by the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. or the leasing by the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. of any other dump about this time?-A. I do not.

Q. Well, some time before. When I say about this time I mean within two or three years .- A. Oh, I bought part of an interest myself of the Hillside.

Q. On what dump is that?-A. That is on lot 38.

Q. What dump is that?-A. It is known as the Florence dump.

Q. Did you buy it from Capt. May individually?-A. From the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

Q. Do you mean from Capt. May individually or the company ?-A. No; through Capt. May as the vice president of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

Q. Where is that dump situated?-A. That is situated in Pittston, on lot 38; in Pittston Township, or in a town called Dupont, Pa., Luzerne County.

Q. How does that dump compare in size with the Katydid?-A. There is no comparison.

Q. Do you mean that the Katydid is much larger?-A. The Katydid is so much smaller and so much poorer.

Q. Do you know of any reason why the Florence was disposed of? Was there any special reason for selling that dump specifically?—A. For the same reason I suppose that inspired him to sell this one-the undivided interest.

Q. That was another case of an undivided interest?-A. Yes. By the way I might say there I had part of the leases from the other owners of this Florence dump, and that may have influenced Capt. May, because I had them, to sell that interest.

Q. Do you mean to say that the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. had interests and that you owned interest?-A. Yes, sir; absolutely.

Q. And Mr. May sold to you?—A. Yes, sir, absolutely.
Q. That is, his company did?—A. His company did, the Hill-side Coal & Iron Co. That was three years ago, long before anything happened as to this matter.

Q. I understand. Mr. Holden, I beg your pardon, but I want to ask you whether or not, when you had that conversation with Capt. May on the 11th of May last, when you gave him this warning, you received any intimation or tip from him that he would like to have you raise such objection?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object. They have been all over that.

The WITNESS. I think I have already said that. I will answer it again if I am allowed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that it is not only in the interest of time, but in the interest of not ling nothing except to protect my wife's and my own interest.

having an unnecessarily cumbersome record, that the same thing should not be proved twice, unless it is challenged.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was then using the same expression that has been used by the managers in the examination of other witnesses. I withdraw it.
Mr. Manager STERLING. I object to that statement. There was no intimation that this witness

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No; the intimation was that Capt. May had given him the tip to make the objection.

Mr. Manager STERLING. No; it was simply a statement by me that Capt. May had given him the tip, so that he would

Cross-examination:
Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Are you a lawyer?—
A. No.

Q. What is your business?—A. Manufacturer of machinery.
Q. Where is your home?—A. Pittston.
Q. And you or your wife had an interest in the Katydid culm dump?-A. I have an interest in lot 46.

Q. Well, you claim on that basis an interest in this culm, did you not?—A. Yes.

Q. About a one twenty-fourth part?—A. That is right.

Q. And Mr. Bevan is your lawyer?-A. He was my lawyer in that particular matter.

Q. You gave Capt. May notice personally on the morning of the 11th?-A. Yes,

Q. At his office?-A. In his office.

Q. Who first mentioned the matter of selling the Katydid culm dump?-A. Mr. Conn, the vice president of the

Q. No; at this meeting on April 11 .- A. I have testified that Capt. May spoke to me as I was about to leave the office.

Q. So he first suggested to you that they were selling the culm dump?-A. Yes.

Q. He knew that your wife was interested in it, did he not?—A. I presume he did; I do not know.
Q. He knew that the Everharts had a claim there for royalty?-A. I do not know whether he knew it or not.

Q. Did he not call your attention to the contract which he had made out and which was on his table at that time?-A. He did. sir.

Q. And did not the contract itself provide that the purchaser should pay royalty to the Everhart estate?-A. This contract he read to me? It did not.

Q. How is that?-A. It did not.

O. The contract that was made out to Mr. Williams that was to be delivered to Bradley. Do you say that that did not have a provision in it to pay royalty to the Everhart estate?—
A. I will qualify that. Mr. May read some of that document to me, but not the whole of it. I never saw anything in it that related to the Everharts.

Q. Anyhow, the contract was there and you saw at least a part of it?-A. I did not see it.

Q. You heard him read a part of it?-A. Yes.

Q. And it was after you were there and after you notified him not to sell it that he sent the contract to Mr. Bradley ?-A. I do not know anything about that.

Q. Did you know or did you learn afterwards that on the same day he sent it to Bradley and did not recall it until the next day after that?—A. I did not, sir. Q. You did not know that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you notify Capt. May not to sell the Hillside inter--A. No, sir.

Q. You simply notified him not to sell your interest or your wife's interest?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether or not he was seeking to sell your wife's interest?—A. I do not.

Q. Did he not read that part of the contract that indicated that he was simply selling the interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.?-A. He was selling his interest, as I understood it, and assuming to work with Robertson & Law, who claimed another part of the interest, to sell it together. That is the impression I got.

Q. Robertson & Law were not mentioned in this contract?-A. Robertson & Law were mentioned in that contract, if my memory serves me.

Q. Were they mentioned as parties to the contract?-A. If my memory serves me-I do not know; I paid little attention to it.

Q. Anyhow, the contract did not purport to be a guaranty of title or anything of that kind?-A. I do not know anything about that, sir. I did not take much interest in it.

Q. And you were not seeking to prevent the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. from selling their interest in the dump?-A. I was seek-

Q. You conceded that they had a perfect right to sell their interest in the dump to Judge Archbald .- A. I conceded nothing; I did not know anything about it. I did not have any objection to it, and I could not have any objection to it.

Q. After you left the office you immediately notified Mr.

Heckle?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. He is administrator of the Everhart estate?-A. Of a part of the Everhart estate.

Q. And you also notified your attorney, Mr. Bevan?—A. Yes. Q. And they both wrote notices to Mr. May?—A. Yes.

Q. So the notice from you and the notice from Bevan and the notice from Heckle all related to the interest of the Everhart estate, the interest of which was provided for in the notice itself. Is not that true?-A. I did not see the contract.

Q. Who is Mr. Saltonstall, who sent a notice also?-A. He is a member of the firm of Gaston, Snow & Saltonstall, guardian of the minor children of John F. Everhart. John F. Everhart was one of the children of John T. Everhart, who died.

Q. He had an interest through the Everhart estate?-A. He did, sir.

Q. So every one of these notices came from persons who were interested directly or indirectly in the Everhart estate?-A. That is right.

Q. About whose interest Capt. May knew perfectly well and had provided for in this contract. Now——

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Is that a statement or a question? I object to the statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands it to be a question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The witness has not answered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness can negative it if he does not agree to it.

The Witness. I have no knowledge of its truth. I do not know anything about it.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) You do have knowledge of the fact that all four of those persons who gave notices were interested in the matter through the Everhart estate?-A. That is right, sir.

Q. The contract speaks for itself. Do you know any other reason why Capt. May withdrew this contract from Bradley? A. I do not, sir. Neither have I had any word from Capt. May since the 11th day of April about the subject.

Q. From your knowledge of the situation and your knowledge of the transaction did you personally see any reason why Capt. May should withdraw the contract because of these notices?-A. I certainly do.

Q. What is it?-A. He would get into great trouble if he made that contract.

Q. How get into trouble?-A. In many ways.

Q. How?—A. In the first place, he has been operating that property, much to our surprise, without any lease, without any right whatsoever.

O. Who has?-A. The Hillside Coal & Iron Co. That is one serious thing he would be up against.

Q. Had they operated it all?-A. They operated it for 30 or 40 years.

Q. How did they operate it?-A. How do you mean?

Q. How do you mean?—A. I mean that they put up a breaker there and took the coal out of the ground.

Q. Who did?—A. The Hillside Coal & Iron Co. Q. Did not Robertson & Law operate it?—A. Robertson did not until some 30 years, and then in the year 1882-I do not know that my dates are right-that portion was pretty well mined. They had leased to Robertson & Law and then Robertson got through, and then the Hillside in turn leased to the Delaware & Hudson Coal Co., who are now operating the property, as I understand the situation. The Hillside Coal & Iron Co. have not any lease whatsoever nor any right to mine the coal on that property.

Q. They own half there, do they not?-A. They own half of it.

Q. That is all they were selling?—A. You did not ask me at. You asked what was the reason, as I understood your question, for selling this coal, and the reason, in my judgment, is this, that when they began to find that we knew, which we did not know prior to this time, that they were operating this property without any lease, not even with a letter which they could show, they were up against something which-

Q. Would that prevent the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. from selling their interest in this dump?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit the witness should be allowed to finish his answer, and not be stopped in the midst of it.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I object to the witness talking about anything except an answer to my question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will confine his reply to the question asked, and then he can explain as fully as he desires.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Let me ask this question, so that we may understand each other: What do you mean when you say the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. would get into trouble by selling their half interest in the Katydid culm dump to Judge Archbald or anybody else?-A. I do not think that

Q. Answer the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Answer the question as asked. The WITNESS. I mean to say that, because of their having no lease from the Brooke people and from the Everhart people in all these years they have been operating the property, they were fearful-this is my judgment-that an action might be brought showing up the whole transaction for the last 30 or 40

Q. Did they have to have a lease on their own interest in order to sell it?-A. They could not sell it. It was an undivided interest.

Q. Could they not sell an undivided interest?-A. They could sell their right, title, and interest.

Q. That is what they were doing, just as you bought from the Brook Land Co. the right, title, and undivided interest, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is all there is to it?-A. Yes.

Q. You say that the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. sold their interest in the Florence dump?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was undivided?—A. That was undivided.

Q. Did you buy it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And they sold it because the title was complicated, did they not?—A. They sold it because the interest had been leased by other people; in other words, I had a portion of the lease myself and controlled it. I bought simply their right, title, and interest in that particular interest.

Q. And they sold their interest in the Florence dump?-A.

That is right.

Q. And they refused to sell an interest finally in the Katydid dump for the reason that the title was complicated ?- A. I do not know what influenced them.

Q. Did Mr. May on the morning of April 11 when you were there read this part of the contract to you-Mr. WORTHINGTON. On what page?

Mr. aMnager STERLING. On page 146:

Whereas a certain tract of land situated partly in Lackawanna and partly in Luzerne County, known and designated as lot No. 46, of certified Pittston Township, patented to John Bennett March 25, 1849, is owned in the following proportions, to wit: The Hillside Coal & Iron Co., twelve twenty-fourths; E. & G. Brook Land Co., six twenty-fourths; estate of James Everhart, five twenty-fourths; and heirs of John T. Everhart, one twenty-fourth.

Did he read that to you that morning when he showed that contract to you?—A. I think not. He did not read that portion of it. He merely handed the paper down, saying, "I am going to sell to a man named Bradley, and here is the document."

Q. If it was in the contract that May had prepared, it would be partly good avidence he know all about these interests?—A be pretty good evidence he knew all about these interests?-A.

I do not know.

Q. As I read the contract it states the interest correctly, does it not?—A. I think so, sir. Q. Mr. Holden, after you had given Capt. May verbal notice in such positive language as you stated a moment ago, why did you think it necessary for you still to write a letter to the same effect and also have your attorney, Bevans, write a letter?—A. Simply to emphasize it; that is all. Then I had not notified Robertson & Law, which I did that same night.

Q. All you claimed to do in these notices was to notify them not to sell the Everhart interest?-A. That is right.

Q. You were not pretending to prevent them from selling the Hillside interest?—A. No, sir; no, indeed.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Redirect examination:

(By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) You said, Mr. Holden, that the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. was operating that property without a lease. What do you mean, the Katydid, or what?-A. Oh, no; lot 46. Q. Including the consolidated breaker property?—A. I do not know how far the consolidated breaker goes. It comprises several properties.

Q. They had been mining and selling that whole ledge of coal?—A. They had been mining coal and returning 20 cents a ton for sizes above pea or chestnut; I have forgotten which. Q. They had been doing it for years without a lense?-A.

Q. That is what you meant when you said that they were operating without any right?—A. Without any lease. That is

Q. Without any right to continue?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there anything, so far as you know, that prevented the Brook people and the Everhart people from stopping them and raising their royalty?—A. Nothing save the diversified interest and the hard work to get a lot of heirs to do anything. That is all.

Q. Mr. Holden, in view of your examination, I feel obliged to ask you to let me have the paper relating to that option which you have and which fixed the price which you paid for it .- A. I think that is a private matter, and I do not know that I can be compelled to state what I paid for that interest.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to it as immaterial. It makes no difference what he was to pay the Brook Land Co.

for their interest.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) The interest was onefourth?-A. One-fourth interest.

Q. In the Katydid culm bank?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think we ought to have it, for we have had so much about the value of that property. It appears now that Judge Archbald and Mr. Williams were to pay $8,000 for the interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. and of Robertson in that dump. We ought to be permitted to show, it seems to me, what was the value of the other interests, so as to have before us what they were getting when they acquired these various interests. It bears on the question of fairness of the Hillside price.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the respondent can show the value of the property which was endeavored to be purchased by Judge Archbald and those with whom he was associated.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I can conceive of no better way of showing the value than by showing the sale of an interest in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair means the interest that Judge Archbald was seeking to purchase. That, the Chair thinks, the counsel has a right to show as fully as he can in any legitimate way, but as to the value of another interest-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If we show the value of one onefourth interest, surely it would show what the value of another fourth interest was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the respondent propose to prove that as an independent fact?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I propose to prove that the witness acquired and paid for one-fourth, and what he paid for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the same dump?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. In the same dump.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the respondent desire to Introduce a paper to that effect?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would be satisfied with the statement of the witness about it. If he stands on that, I would like to have him produce the paper.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I desire to say, Mr. President, that the sale of the property is not competent evidence to show what its fair market value is. They have gone into the question as to the value of the Katydid culm dump very extensively and it seems to me a great deal more extensively than the issue We insisted that it was not material at all to the issue what the value was. This will open up the question as to Brook's title, as to whether he had any title or not. The very contract that May submitted, where May knew that Archbald and Williams were to get the Katydid culm dump, provided that the purchaser should pay a royalty to the Everharts just as they had been paying a royalty to the Brook Co. So it is wholly immaterial, not only what these gentlemen agreed to pay for the Brook land interest, but it is immaterial as to what its value is. They have gone into the whole question as to what these gentlemen were selling, and providing in the agreement that the Brook Land Co. should be taken care of by way of royalties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the question of materiality of evidence is a different one from the question as to its conclusiveness. The counsel still have the opportunity to argue as to whether or not the price offered or paid was conclusive or unimportant evidence as to the value.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I should like to suggest further, if the President will permit me, if evidence with reference to the value is pertinent at all to the issue in article 1 it is per-tinent for the purpose of showing Judge Archbald's attitude of mind in purchasing it, as to whether or not he could make money out of the transaction. Inasmuch as he was simply purchasing and May was simply selling the interest of the Hillside may be read.

Coal & Iron Co. in this contract which he made to Bradley, it is certainly immaterial as to what the witness agreed to pay Brook and what the value of Brook's interest was in the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that, in view of the fact that the value of the property has been thoroughly gone into and stress has been laid on it, the respondent is entitled to introduce any evidence he can which will throw light on the question as to the true value of this property. It may be evidence which may be shown by argument not to be entitled to much weight, but still it is evidence the Chair would not feel justified in excluding under the circumstances. Therefore, while the Chair does not rule on the question of the admissibility of the particualr paper, he does rule to the effect that the fact may be proven as to any sale or offer for sale of any equivalent or partial interest in this property.
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Well, Mr. Holden, what did you pay for that one-fourth interest in the Katydid dump?

The WITNESS. Am I obliged to answer? The PRESIDING OFFICER. You are.

The WITNESS, $1,750.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) When?—A. I can not tell you exactly, but some time in the middle of the summer.

Q. In the middle of last summer?—A. Last summer: 1912. Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may be retired and be excused.

TESTIMONY OF W. W. RISSINGER-RECALLED.

W. W. Rissinger, having been previously sworn, was recalled and testified further, as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Rissinger, when you were examined as a witness on behalf of the managers you testified that you had paid to Mr. Russell $2,000 out of the proceeds or discount of a note given by yourself to the order of Mr. Hutchinson and Judge Archbald and indorsed by them. Have you since that testimony endeavored to find the check by which that payment was made?-A. Yes, sir; I found it was paid direct to the owners of the concession, because it had been a discount between the secretary and president of the company. I found we paid it to the owners of the concession direct.

Q. Have you the check with you?-A. (Producing paper.) I have the check from the bank; yes, sir.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, I think it is my duty to object for the simple reason that this is wholly immaterial to the issue in the case, and in the interest of time we do object.

Mr. SIMPSON. It was a matter brought out by the managers themselves in the examination of Mr. Rissinger. I propose to offer this check simply to fix the fact as to the actual payment. When we had Mr. Russell on the stand, to whom Mr. Rissinger said he paid the money, under the cross-examination of Mr. Sterling there was a book produced to show that there was no payment made to Mr. Russell, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Rissinger said he paid it to Mr. Russell. For that reason we have recalled him to produce the check which shows the payment. They themselves brought it out in their examination of this witness

Mr. Manager STERLING. It does not justify them in sinning because we did. The only thing we drew out or sought to draw out that was material was whether or not any of this money went to Judge Archbald. That was the purpose of our examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire of the counsel for the respondent in what way the payment or nonpayment of this check illustrates any issue made in this case?

Mr. SIMPSON. The managers themselves have made the Their claim was, and I suppose is, that this note which was given by this witness to the order of Judge Archbald and Mrs. Hutchinson and indorsed by Judge Archbald was a note given in payment of the interest or a portion of the interest in which this witness was interested, and it is the subject matter of the article of impeachment.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, we withdraw the objection.

Mr. SIMPSON. Very well.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We can save time by doing it.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) This is the check which paid a portion of the money?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMPSON. I offer that check in evidence, Mr. President.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Let it be read first.

Mr. SIMPSON. I hand it to the Secretary and ask that it

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Who was Alfred H. Morris, agent?-A. He was one of the owners of the Honduras concession that we spoke about.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. Rissinger, this $2,000 check was a part of the money that you got on Judge Archbald's note?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you sent to the promoters of this gold-mining scheme?-A. Yes, sir; to the owners of the concession.

Q. And $500 of the money you put in your own pocket?used it personally, but Judge Archbald did not get any of it.

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH P. JENNINGS-RECALLED.

Joseph P. Jennings, having been previously sworn, was recalled and testified further, as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Since you were upon the stand have you gone to the Katydid dump and made a survey?-A. I have.

Q. Have you the result of that survey here?-A. I have.

Q. Please produce it.

(The witness produced a paper, which was handed to the counsel for the respondent and then to the managers.)

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) You have both a map and a statement?—A. I have, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I offer both the map and statement

This witness, it will be remembered, was put on in evidence. the stand, but testified from figures made by a deceased surveyor. His testimony was excluded on that ground. So he has gone back and made a survey of his own.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We remember it very well, and we object to the report, because the witness before was questioned thoroughly as to his competency and he never qualified to make a survey of this kind. He knew absolutely nothing about how to make a survey of this kind.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If the Chair wants to hear from us on that objection, we will ask leave to examine the witness as to his qualifications.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to counsel to refer to the former examination and it may not then

Mr. SIMPSON. It is on page 840, when he was first called. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Shall I read it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, No.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is at page 840. He was not asked any question particularly on his qualification as a surveyor. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without repeating questions, the Chair will recognize the right of counsel to propound additional questions. It is not necessary to repeat questions heretofore asked.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) What has been your experience and your qualifications as a mining engineer?-A. I worked on the corps of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. for two and a half years, after which time I went to Lafayette College at Easton and took the engineering course and graduated from the technical department of that institution in 1904.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have not been able to hear clearly the answer.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Let the answer be read.

The Reporter read the preceding question and answer. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) You graduated as what?— A. Civil engineer.

Q. And since 1904 in what way have you been engaged in reference to coal property and culm and coal dumps?-A. I have been in active charge of two collieries for five years, and of three for six.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire if the managers desire to be heard upon the question.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I have nothing further to add to what I have said. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the witness is sufficiently qualified.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Is this the first coal dump you ever measured?—A. No, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have offered the map in evidence, and I offer the statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that counsel will have to get the witness to testify to it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The witness has already stated that he went to the Katydid dump and made a survey, and that this is the result of his survey.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to the map.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness can testify as to the details of the map. The witness can prove that he has made the map and then it may be offered in evidence.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We shall urge the same objection to this report that was urged to the others.

three reports went in by agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not admitted the report. On the contrary, the Chair has expressly ruled that it can not be admitted at this time.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I understood the president to say that it would be admitted later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; we are taking one thing at a time.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Leaving the map aside for the present, I will ask you to state-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness can testify from the map to refresh his memory in general. There is no objection to that.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Very well. State then the result of your measurements and investigation; and you may refresh your memory by anything that you made yourself at the time.

The WITNESS. Katydid dump:

JOSEPH P. JENNINGS.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. In view of that statement-counsel do not care to have the map go in if the managers do not-I want to ask the witness whether or not that included the conical dump which is shown on the map here?-A. No, sir.

Q. You have been referring to Mr. Rittenhouse's figuresmean those which are in evidence? Are you familiar with them?-A. Yes, sir; those are the figures that he gave.

Q. And with his map?-A. I am familiar with his map; yes, sir.

Q. And all in evidence?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Johnson's figures? Mr. WORTHINGTON. Both. [To the witness.] Whenever you refer to Johnson's figures, you mean those in evidence?-A. Yes, sir; I took that out of the record.

Q. Is there any difference between your method of calculation and Rittenhouse's, except that you omit the conical dump which he included?—A. There is no difference in calculation. He puts in more of the bank than I do-more of that rock fill.

Q What is that difference? Explain that .- A. That difference comes in where the rock and culm were dumped in together, as was testified to by Mr. Johnson, and formed a vertical wall. Mr. Rittenhouse did not know that was there. He assumed that the bank sloped both ways and, of course, he would get more than I would.

Q. Why do you say Mr. Rittenhouse assumed that?-A. His profile shows it.

Q. The profile in evidence ?—A. The profile in evidence shows the slope; yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would go to the map back there and show just where this location is of which you are speaking.-A. (After going to and examining the map in the rear of the Chamber.) It is marked on here, starting at point B [indicating] and following this zigzag line around to about the point A there as marked [indicating].

Q. Now, just explain right there what you mean. You have given a vertical line there, and Mr. Rittenhouse has given a slope.-A. The culm was dumped along here [indicating], and the rock was dumped along there [indicating]. The slope—the old mine opening—went under the cliff here [indicating], and Robertson & Law put in a number of mine tracks radiating from a common point in order to dispose of the mine rock. That rock material was dumped there [indicating] before the culm was dumped. A person going on the ground to-day could not tell which was dumped first. Mr. Rittenhouse in his profile estimates that this bank slopes under this slush bank, which is not so.

Q. That is shown by his profile that is in evidence?-A.

Yes, sir.
Q. Will you please look at this map [indicating], which is in evidence, and the blue print, which is marked "U. S. S. Exhibit V," being the map which, as it appears from the evidence, Capt. May acted upon when he made the recommendation to sell for $45,000-

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to the statement for the reason that that does not appear. We understand it appears in the evidence that Capt. May testified that he estimated $5,000 gross tons. That is his testimony.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Look at that map, then, which counsel for the respondent claim is the one that the evidence Capt. May acted upon. Have you also taken that dence shows Capt. May acted upon. Have you also taken that map and made a calculation as to the material in this bank from that?-A. I have.

Q. Have you got that calculation?-A. I have.

Q. I wish, refreshing your memory by any figures you have, you would state the result of that.—A. The number of cubic feet in solids, as shown in that print, is 2,316,065, which, at 53 pounds to the cubic foot, is 54,800 tons of material.

Q. Why do you take 53 pounds to the cubic foot?—A. It measuring it up. It depends upon the amount of moisture. You never could weigh a portion of a culm dump and get the same thing twice, because the amount of moisture in it would determine the weight.

Q. Is there a large variance or is it generally in a small degree?-A. There might be a variance of a few pounds to the cubic foot. I took it at 53 because it is the easiest to calculate.

Q. I wish you would now look at the map, which is in evidence, and which is known as the Merriman map, which appears facing page 987 in the record in this case. I ask you, taking the same blue print, U. S. S. Exhibit V, to tell me if you can tell from that map whether it is based upon the assumption of a vertical line where you have indicated Mr. Rittenhouse had a slope?-A. Yes; it is.

Q. And that, too, omits the conical dump?-A. It omits the conical dump.

Q. I observe, Mr. Jennings, on this blue print, Exhibit V, there appear to be some figures in pencil which appear clearly on the map as printed in the record. Can you identify those figures ?- A. Those figures are Mr. May's figures.

Q. Capt. May's figures, you mean?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, gentlemen.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) The map you are testifying about there, the blue print, was made by Merriman, was it not?—A. It was made by Mr. Merriman.

Q. He is dead?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was the engineer for the Erie Railroad Co. and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. for many years, was he not?-A. He was the engineer for the land department for many years.

Q. He had great experience, did he not, in measuring culm dumps?-A. I could not say as to that.

Q. Well, he was thoroughly qualified to do it, was he not, from his experience, being connected with the coal business?-A. I suppose he was; yes, sir.

Q. Well, do you think he was as well qualified as you are?-

A. I think I am as well qualified as he was.

Q. Better? Do you think you are better qualified?-A. I think I am just as qualified as he was.

Q. I have to agree with you on that, because I do not know. Now, who wrote at the bottom of the map there that Mr. Merriman made in the lower right-hand corner?-A. He wrote that, sir.

Q. He says, "Estimate, 55,000 gross tons available"-

Yes, sir.
Q. "Exclusive of slush, rock, dirt, etc., of no value, as per Mr. Johnson, inspector"?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So Mr. Merriman, an experienced engineer, and Mr. Johnson found 55,000 tons of coal, did they not?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did they find there? What does that mean?-A. That means 55,000 tons of material.

Q. In the whole dump?—A. No, sir. Q. What does it mean?—A. In that part outlined in that blue print.

Q. That means everything that they measured, does it?-

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, it says "exclusive of rock, slate, dirt, &c.," does it not?—A. Rock, slush, dirt, &c.
Q. So it excludes everything but coal, does it not?—A. No, sir. Q. And finds 55,000 tons of coal, which is within about three or four thousand tons of what Mr. Saums estimated and what-Mr. WORTHINGTON. We object to arguing with the witness as to what Mr. Saums said. Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) And what Mr. Rittenhouse made? You knew that Mr. Saums made a survey of this, did you not?-A. I knew that.

Q. You knew he made it for the Du Pont Powder Co. when they were considering purchasing?-A. Not until I heard it spoken of here.

Q. You know now that he did make it, and made it for that purpose?-A. I did not understand that Mr. Saums made a survey.

Q. He found 40,000 gross tons of material, did he not?-A. I do not know what he testified to.

Q. And Mr. Rittenhouse found something over $5,000 gross tons?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks all that is in evidence. The witness can not strengthen it by saying it is there. Unless it is intended to ask a question predicated on

Q. Why do you take 53 pounds to the cubic foot?—A. It varies a pound or so. You never get the same thing twice in mate at the time when there were no impeachment proceedings on hand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not necessary to have testimony from him as to what other witnesses testified.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Very well; I will not pursue it any further.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) You sa that Rittenhouse made a survey?—A. Yes, sir. You say that you knew

Q. And he made it not knowing the purpose of his survey, did he not ?- A. No, sir; he did not know what was there; he did not know the lay of the ground.

Q. You have made your survey, and were sent by the counsel for Judge Archbald since this trial commenced to make a survey for the purposes of this hearing, were you not?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all. Redirect examination:

(By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) In view of the cross-examination, what is meant by the reference there to slush, rock, dirt, and so forth?-A. When we-

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object. It speaks for itself.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that all that evidence is improper. That report speaks for itself, all that evidence in unless it is in ambiguity.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well, Mr. President, I will not abuse your patience further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it has been suggested that both sides are agreeable to an adjournment at this time.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. So far as the counsel for the re-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. So far as the counsel for the respondent are concerned we are entirely content.

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is agreeable to us, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. I then, Mr. President, ask unanimous consent that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment do now adjourn.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I inquire if it is not possible to close the testimony to-day? The time of the Senate is very valuable, and we ought to get through with this testimony, it seems to me.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think, if we could go on, we could close to-day with everybody except Judge Archbald, whom we expect to put upon the stand. Of course, his direct examination will be quite lengthy. We have yet a number of witnesses and some papers to offer in evidence. The testimony of those witnesses will all be comparatively short, I should say, but I think if we should go on and undertake to finish with the evidence, except the examination of the respondent, it would probably take us until 6 o'clock. It is a little hard to tell as to that; but, so far as we are concerned, we are entirely content to adjourn now or to go on.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if there is a disposition to go on, of course, I will not make the request. I understood that both sides were rather desirous of adjourning at the present time, but I may have been misinformed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I simply express the hope that we may finish the testimony, with the exception of the respondent's statement, if possible, to-day on account of the other work we have before us. We have had a vacation of a couple of weeks, and it seems to me we might as well continue until 6 o'clock this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel for the respondent will proceed with the testimony.

TESTIMONY OF R. M. SALTONSTALL.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I desire now to make a statement in regard to Mr. Saltonstall, whose name has been mentioned here as one of the persons who sent the notice to Capt. May at the suggestion of the witness, Mr. Holden. Mr. Saltonstall was here yesterday, and we went with him to confer with the managers, and arrived at an agreement which I was about to state. Mr. Saltonstall was very anxious to be allowed to go back to keep an engagement which he had in Boston

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, the agreement was submitted to the managers, and we have no objection to the statement going in in lieu of the testimony of Mr. Saltonstall; but it is admitted, I presume, that he is the Saltonstall who represented a part of the Everhart interests?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Certainly; that is the reason why we desire his testimony.

Mr. Manager STERLING. With that understanding, we have no objection to it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The statement is as follows: R. M. Saltonstall would testify that he wrote the letters of April 13, 1911, to Capt. W. A. May and to Robertson and Law, which are in evidence as Exhibits G and Q, at the suggestion of Mr. Charles P. Holden, who told him that the Hillside Coul & Iron Co. was about to sell the dump on lot 46, referred to in the evidence; that nothing was said to him at that time by said Holden about Judge Archbald; that he, Saltonstall, when he wrote those letters, had no knowledge or susplicion that any investigation of Judge Archbald was contemplated; and that, so far as the witness knew, Judge Archbald had no interest in the proposed sale.

That, as has been stated by Mr. Manager Sterling, we agree may stand in place of the evidence of Mr. Saltonstall.

TESTIMONY OF ALLEN V. COCKRELL.

Allen V. Cockrell, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Cockrell, your full name. please.-A. Allen V. Cockrell.

Q. You are connected in some way with the Interstate Commerce Commission, I believe?-A. I am now a special examiner.

Q. In January and February of 1912 how were you employed?-A. I was confidential clerk.

Q. Of Commissioner Meyer?—A. Assigned to him; yes, sir. Q. You remember, do you, the time when William P. Boland came from Scranton down to Washington and saw you and Commissioner Meyer?-A. I do.

Q. And you know, of course, of the statement that was taken to the President by Commissioner Meyer?-A. I do.

Q. You prepared that statement, I believe?-A. I prepared a statement, which, I understand, Mr. Meyer took to the President.

Q. I show you the statement which appears in this record on pages 702 and 703. Just glance at it, so as to be able to identify Look at it as closely as may be necessary to satisfy you that it is the paper you drafted .- A. (After examining paper.) I identify this as a copy of the paper.

Q. From whom did you get the information which was embodied in that statement?-A. From Mr. William P. Boland.

Q. I believe you were present at a hearing at the Attorney General's office, which took place on the 21st of February, 1912 when Mr. Edward J. Williams was there and was examined, and Mr. William P. Boland and Mr. C. G. Boland?—A. I was.
Q. How did you come to be there, Mr. Cockrell?—A. I do not know. Mr. Meyer told me to go and take those gentlemen to the Attorney General's office.

Q. And you participated in the questioning of Mr. Williams there?—A. The questioning was done by the Attorney General. At times I would make a remark to elucidate some of the statements

Q. Well, I will not go into the details of that.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. One more question. Why was the name of Judge Witmer omitted from this statement?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object. Nothing has been said about Judge Witmer.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Oh, yes. Mr. Meyer was asked about that, and he said-

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I am talking about this witness. You have asked this witness nothing about Judge Witmer.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No; but I am asking him about it

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the question?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was trying to save time, but I will withdraw the question for the present and ask another. Did Boland, in this same conversation, make charges to you against Judge Witmer?

Mr. Manager STERLING and Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object to that.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, when Mr. Commissioner Meyer was on the stand he was asked about that, and he stated that if Judge Witmer's name was intentionally left out of the paper that was taken to the President it must have been done by Mr. Cockrell and not by him, because Cockrell had the interview. Now, I think we ought to be permitted to show a little something more about the history of this transaction than the managers saw fit to introduce through Mr. Meyer. They called Mr. Commissioner Meyer here as their witness. He did not know anything about Judge Archbald's transactions or anything he had done, and did not give a word of testimony that was competent on any issue in this case, except that the managers stated that they proposed to show the history of the movement or proceeding which resulted in this impeachment. I think that we ought to be able to show, as we propose to show, that the same W. P. Boland who made the charges against Judge Archbald which are embodied in this statement, nearly every one of which has been shown to be utterly false, made similar charges against Judge Witmer at the same time, and that the paper which was prepared and taken to the President omitted entirely any reference to Judge Witmer, but bore only upon Judge Archbald, who happened to be a member of the Commerce Court, to which court appeals lie from the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commis-

I think that is a part of the history of this transaction with which the Senate ought to be acquainted, because I propose to prove that William P. Boland charged before the Interstate Commerce Commission, as he charged on this witness stand, that Judge Witmer had rendered a decision in the Peale case which he said ruined him, or was intended to ruin him, at the instigation of Judge Archbald. Why, when they embodied in the statement the charge about Judge Archbald, they did not also embody the charge about that other Federal judge is what we want to find out, and I think the Senate ought to know the reason. The entire history of this case, since we have gone back to Commissioner Meyer, ought to be before the Senate. As it is now, it is a mangled proceeding. We have got here a part of it, but we have not got what may prove to be the most important part of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the evidence were admitted as to what has been said regarding Judge Witmer, of course, issue could be raised on it as to whether or not what was then said was true or false, and that would open another investigation as to whether or not Judge Witmer had done wrong, which is not involved in this case. The Chair will, therefore, exclude the evidence.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That being so, Mr. President, I have nothing further to ask this witness.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Mr. Cockrell, I will ask you whether or not you took down this statement in shorthand, or took it down at the time it was made, or made it out from memory after he had made the statement to you?-A. Mr. Boland's statement was made in the morning. I was not asked until late that afternoon to make a memorandum; and I had to rely entirely upon my memory in preparing the memorandum which went to the President.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is all.

Redirect examination

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Is that an accurate statement of what Boland said, or the substance of it?-A. So far as I can remember; yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire.

TESTIMONY OF ROBERT C. TRACY.

Robert C. Tracy, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) You are connected with the Department of Justice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what capacity?—A. Clerk.
Q. Did you make a schedule showing the names and occupations of the jury commissioners of the various Federal districts throughout the country?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you look at the paper I hand you, and tell me, please, whether that is the schedule which was prepared by you?—A.

(After examining paper.) Yes, sir.
Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMPSON. In order to get the record straight, I will offer it so that Mr. Manager Florp may object to it. I now offer the schedule in evidence.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object to it as wholly immaterial. It purports to be a list of jury commissioners and their occupations. We object to it; it is wholly irrelevant and incompetent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Jury commissioners of what jurisdiction?

Mr. SIMPSON. Of various Federal districts throughout the country. You may remember, sir, if you will listen a moment so that I may get before you exactly the point of it, that in one of the articles of impeachment—the twelfth article, I think—objection was made to the appointment by Judge Archbald of Mr. Woodward as a jury commissioner, he being a lawyer. This schedule is made up simply for the purpose of showing throughout the country, in all the judicial districts of the country, the names and occupations of the jury commissioners and that a large number of them are in fact lawyers. That bears upon the question as to whether or not there was any exercise of ill faith or bad faith, or whatever you may choose to call it, in selecting a lawyer for that office.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, has counsel concluded?

Mr. SIMPSON. I have concluded offering the schedule and all I have to say on it.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I desire to say that we object to this particular testimony for two reasons. In the first place, if it be a bad custom to appoint lawyers as jury commissioners, the fact that other judges may have indulged in that bad custom can not make it a law. The present occupant of the chair is familiar with the rule, which is fundamental, that a custom, even under the law merchant, to become a law must be a good custom.

And again, Mr. President, we object to it because the par-And again, Mr. President, we object to it because the particular charge here is that he appointed as a jury commissioner a railroad attorney. This list here purports on its face to show no more than that they were attorneys. Perhaps it may not be the subject of criticism for a judge to appoint as a jury commissioner an attorney disassociated with the railroad business, disassociated with the business of the court over which the judge presides.

The very gravamen of this charge is that he appointed not only a lawyer-that is not the test-but that he appointed a lawyer of corporations having litigation before the court over which he presided; and we think it is clear upon that point that this evidence is not admissible.

Mr. SIMPSON. I do not claim that we are proving a custom here in any such sense as the chairman of the managers The question we have here, sir, is a question of suggests. criminal intent, of corrupt action on the part of Judge Archbald, and anything which tends to show that there was no such criminal intent, no corrupt motive on his part, is evidence, the weight of which the Senate will ultimately have to determine.

Now, one of the first steps in showing that is that there has been throughout the country the appointment of lawyers as jury commissioners. Then, when Judge Archbald is on the stand, the next step will necessarily have to be taken, by way of our proofs upon that point, and then the Senate, sir, will pass upon the whole matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is in grave doubt as to whether or not it is material, but does not think it is a matter of very great importance. It will give the respondent the benefit of the doubt in the mind of the Chair, and let the evidence go in for what it is worth.

Mr. SIMPSON. I will not ask that it be read; I think it would be quite a waste of time; but ask that it be marked as an exhibit and go into the record. The paper is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF WEST VIRGINIA, Parkersburg, October 7, 1912.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

The Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

Sie: Replying to the department's letter dated September 26, 1912, initials JJG-AGM, I beg to advise I have made inquiries of A. C. Nadenbousch and J. J. Jackson, jury commissioners, respectively, for Martinsburg and Clarksburg, with respect to the information desired, and beg to report first with reference to Mr. Nadenbousch:

He is regularly retained as attorney by the Cumberland Valley Railroad Co., a small railroad operating in that region, I understand running between Harrisburg, Pa., and Winchester, Va.

After having ascertained this fact I reported the same to Judge Dayton, who directed me to say that if for any reason the department would consider Mr. Nadenbousch's office of jury commissioner inconsistent with the employment noted above, he will request his resignation and appoint some one in his stead. Mr. Nadenbousch was appointed by the former Federal judge, Hon. John J. Jackson, and Judge Dayton was not cognizant of his employment by the railroad in question, and in fact the subject had never been under discussion during Judge Dayton's tenure of office. Our next regular term of court at Martinsburg does not convene until next April.

With respect to Mr. J. J. Jackson, jury commissioner at Clarksburg, he is not retained by any railroad or corporation, and in fact informs me he is entirely out of the active practice of the law.

Very respectfully,

C. B. Kefanner, Glerk.

C. B. KEFANVER, Clerk.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We have no questions. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN T. BROWN.

John T. Brown, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. MARTIN.) Where is your home?-A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. What is your business?-A. I am employed on the Scranton Times as a reporter.

Q. How long have you been employed as such reporter on that paper?—A. Ten years.

Q. Were you working on that paper in April, 1912?-A. Yes,

Q. Do you remember the date on which the articles appeared in your paper for the first time with reference to Judge Arch-

Dald?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. I show you the Scranton Times bearing date April 22, 1912, and ask you if that is the paper in which that first appeared in Scranton?—A. (After examination.) Yes, sir; this is the first one.

Q. The article in the paper entitled "Charges filed against Judge R. W. Archbald, of the Commerce Court," is the first appearance of any newspaper article published in Scranton?— A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect the appearance of the article in the Philadelphia North American?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was the same day. It was the morning of the 22d of April.

Q. I show you the copy of the Philadelphia North American dated Monday, April 22, and ask you if that is the edition of that paper in which the articles first appeared?—A. (After examination.) Yes, sir.

Q. What time does the Philadelphia North American circulate in Scranton? I mean what time of the day would that newspaper reach Scranton for circulation?-A. Well, I do not know anything about the general circulation of the North American through the city, although it has quite a circulation, except we get two copies of it at our office, delivered by a newsboy, every morning about 9 o'clock.

Q. I think you misunderstood my question. time of the day it appeared in Scranton?-A. That is what I have said-9 o'clock in the morning.

Q. That is the first time it appears there-9 o'clock in the morning?-A. That I have any knowledge of.

Q. What time of the day is the Scranton Times published?—A. The first edition of the Scranton Times gets on the streets of Scranton about half past 1 o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. Can you say whether this paper I have shown you, the Scranton Times, was the first or last edition, or what time of day this edition does appear upon the streets of Scranton?—A. We have three editions a day; one that gets on the streets about half past 1; the second one gets out about half past 3; and the last about quarter past 4—that is our last edition, the stock

Q. That would appear on the streets, then, about quarter past 4 of that date?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN. You may cross-examine. Mr. Manager WEBB. We have no questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE M. WATSON.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer in evidence the testimony of George M. Watson, as taken by the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives and published at pages 1317 to 1401 of those proceedings.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President-

Mr. SEMPSON. Pardon me one minute. We submitted this to the chairman of the managers, or, rather, the question of putting in only a part of it, and the chairman of the managers has told us to-day that he prefers to have the whole testimony go in. We do not ask to have it read, because it would take the larger part of the day to do so, but there are parts of it that both sides would like to refer to, and so I ask that it all go in. The witness is ill; and the managers tried to get him and reported they could not; and he is unable to leave his room, I understand.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. That is satisfactory. I simply desired to object to reading portions of the testimony.

Mr. SIMPSON. We do not desire to read any of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection it will be incorporated as a part of the record in this case.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Then it ought to be printed in the record as if it had been given here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Undoubtedly-

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes; but we are not going to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The same as if the witness had been on the stand here.

Mr. POMERENE. If it is not out of order, Mr. President, may I ask to what charge this applies?

Mr. SIMPSON. It relates to the second article, in the matter of the attempt to settle the controversies between the Marian Coal Co. and the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co.

The matter referred to is as follows:

George M. Watson, being first duly sworn, was examined and testified

George M. Watson, being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

The Chairman. Mr. Watson, please give your full name, your address, and your occupation.

Mr. Watson. My name is George M. Watson. I live in Scranton, at 1659 Jefferson Avenue. My office is at present 322 Conneil Building. It was 822 until very recently. I moved downstairs several flights.

The Chairman. And your occupation?

Mr. Watson. My occupation is that of a lawyer, an attorney.

The Chairman. How long have you known Edward J. Williams?

Mr. Watson. A good while; I could not tell, but I remember him as a mine foreman many years ago, when he was employed. For many years he has not been empleyed as a miner, working about the mines, and when he was employed I knew him. I judge it was—well, twenty-odd years ago.

The Chairman. What has been his occupation since he quit mining? Mr. Watson. I really do not know. Until the last year or two I met him very infrequently, and I do not know.

The Chairman. What has he been doing in the last year or two?

Mr. Watson. I hardly know that. I have seen him on the street. There seem to be two blocks which we have to travel very often to get to the courthouse and to the post office, and he is moving along the street there when I see him.

The Chairman. Do you know of his operating any culm banks or doing any of that sort of business?

Mr. Watson. I never knew that he did. Since this suit began I have understood that he was indirectly interested in this coal company or this culm washery.

nnderstood that he was indirectly interested in this coal company or this culm washery.

The Chairman. How long have you known Judge Archbald?

Mr. Watson. A great many years; I Judge 30; maybe longer—32.

The Chairman. Will you please state in your own way, but fully, just how you became retained by the Bolands to negotiate the sale of their interest in the Marian Coal Co. to the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, and just how and by whom those ugediations were conducted from the time you were originally employed by the Bolands, up to the present time.

Mr. Watson. What moved Mr. Boland to come to my office, I do not know. He came to my office, my recollection is, some time in August; perhaps the latter part.

were conducted from the time you were originally employed by the Bolands, up to the present time.

Mr. Warson. What moved Mr. Boland to come to my office, I do not know. He came to my office, my recollection is, some time in August; perhaps the latter part.

The Chairman. Which Boland, and when?

Mr. Warson. That was C. G. Boland, in August of last year. I will not be positive about that. My better judgment would be September; but there has been so much in the testimony here about August that I may be mistaken, and it might have been August. I made no note of it, and all the data I did have I gave to Mr. William P. Boland when I returned the papers to him, I think about the 10th day of October.

Mr. Boland came to my office and told me that he desired to get rid of this washery, to sell it; and he said, "I am satisfied that you can sell the washery for me." I told him I knew nothing of it, and he said they had a lawsuit, and I never heard of that either. It seems to me it was Peale, Peacock & Kerr, the way he gave the name—and I know something of them as coal men—had begun an action; perhaps it was an equity proceeding; I have forgotten just what it was; but, at any rate, it was brought in the United States circuit court for that district, years before—I do not know how long before, but a couple of years before that, and that they had a judge that had been appointed quite recently, Judge Witmer, and he asked me if I knew him. I told him I did just know the man—that was all; I never talked with him much and never practiced law before him any, so I did not know him much. Well, he wanted something done by which we could find out if that case could be adjusted. It seems that they were talking about rates, or there was some difficulty about what interest Peale had, or if he had any interest, and he had made advances of money or something like that, and he wanted to know if I could get the data. Now, this was C. G. Boland. I had not seen W. P. Boland at that time, or for some time after. I told him I would look the m begun; I found there had been a demurrer; I found it had been disposed of; I found that a commissioner had been appointed to take testimony, and I found that they had taken the testimony and closed the case, and that the report was then in the hands of Judge Witmer. That is what I discovered when I first went into this case.

I told Mr. Boland that that was the status of the case, and I said, "It is all in the hands of Judge Witmer now, and the arguments are all over." Well, he did not like it. He did not like that way. He said there ought to be some way of getting into that court and getting the court to understand the case better than he knew they did; and there was some comment made upon Mr. Donnelly. This was the first I knew that Mr. Bonnelly was connected with that case.

Finally, after three or four meetings with Mr. Boland—and these meetings may not have been planned, because my office was so located that Mr. Boland was obliged to pass it in going to the Underwriters' Insurance office, which was two doors beyond me; he passed there every day, sometimes a couple of times a day, and he may have dropped in casually. I do not know that he came over purposely to see me, but he came in, as I say, frequently, three or four or five times, before Mr. W. P. Boland came into the case at all.

Then he made a suggestion to me that they would like to sell this property, and asked me if I thought I could negotiate with the Lackawanna road, and I told him perhaps I could; I did not know; I knew some of the men, but some of them I did not know, that were to me, you know. The foad has changed management within a dozen years, and some of those people are there that I do not know. But after a while he told me that he would like to retain me to do this work for them, and that he would give me $5,000 for a fee if I could get the Lackawanna Baliroad to take this property. Now, he did not know were there together, and there was some little discussion as to the status of this case. This case in the United States court seemed to ago," and he named the man that told him. So he believed, I fancy, that this—

The Chairman. Let us have it all. You say he named the man?

Mr. Warson. He did; he named the man.

The Chairman. State his name.

Mr. Warson. His name is Searle—E. R. W. Searle, I think it is, or E. W. R. Searle. I have forgotten the name, but it was two or three letters anyway.

The Chairman. Who was that?

Mr. Warson. E. R. W. Searle was the clerk of the circuit court and district court of the middle district of Pennsylvania.

The Chairman. And who was the judge of that court?

Mr. Warson. At this time? Judge Witmer.

The Chairman. Who was it hat had been the judge before that, when he "could have told him months before that he was beaten"? Who was the judge at that time?

Mr. Warson. He did not say who told him months before, but the judge before that, his predecessor, had been Judge Archabid. He had been there for a number of years—from the organization of the court.

The Chairman. How recently had Judge Witmer come upon the bench before this talk of yours with the Bokunds?

Mr. Warson. I could not tell you, Judge; I could not tell you. In fact, I have not been in very good thinking order for about a year?

Mr. Warson. Yes: and I can not go back and give dates.

a year?

Mr. Watson. Yes; and I can not go back and give dates.

The CHAIRMAN. What time do you fix, if you can, when this conversation occurred with the Bolands that you have spoken of?

Mr. Watson. My recollection would be—my own independent recollection would be—that it was in the month of September, and toward the middle.

Mr. WATSON. My recollection would be—my own independent recollection would be—that it was in the month of September, and toward the middle.

The Chairman. 1911?

Mr. Watson. 1911. Now, as I say, Judge Witmer came on the bench at the organization of the Commerce Court.

The Chairman. This conversation with the Bolands happened before the decree was rendered, did it not?

Mr. Watson. Yes; there was no decree when I looked at the record. There had been no decree then, because I suggested to him, when he told me that, that the orderly way to proceed would be to draw up a petition setting forth the fact that the judge had not properly discussed or digested the evidence, and ask for a reargument. I suggested it to Boland; told him I would join with his Mr. Donnelly, after I found Mr. Donnelly was there, and present the petition; so I know that the decree had not been handed down at that time. Then I told him right there at that time that after the decree was handed down the way to do was to go into the—

The Chairman. When was it that that clerk said that he could have told this months before?

Mr. Watson. Well, in the light of present events, I would not want to say that he ever said it. The clerk never said it to me. He said it to Mr. Boland, so Mr. Boland said, and I am not so sure now. At that time I thought perhaps there had been something of that kind said.

The Chairman. But you do not know of it of your own knowledge?

Mr. Watson. He did not fix any time at all.

The Chairman. That he could have told him that menths ago?

Mr. Watson. He could have told him that he was beaten.

The Chairman. That he could have told him that was an adjustment before the lerk told him that the was obtain an adjustment before the literstate Commerce Commission. I knew nothing about the practice; I never had had a case before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and we did some little talking about it, and Mr. Boland tunished me maps—that is, a distance map, you call it—showing the towns along the lines where they were selling anth

I think it went as far west and southwest, perhaps, as St. Louis, as far north as Duluth—somewhere up in there—and west of Buffalo, and various points. Many New York State points, many Pennsylvania points, and New Jersey, were on this map, and the lines were drawn from a center leading to this place, the mileage put on, and the rate per ton that they charged. That was one of the papers that he gave me.

The Chairman. Mr. Watson, going back now to the conversation with the Bolands, you say that was in August or September of 1911?

Mr. Watson. Yes; my judgment would be it was in the middle of September.

The Chairman. But since you heard the witnesses testify here fixing it in August, you are in doubt about it?

Mr. Watson. Well. I could not say that.

The Chairman. What do you say?

Mr. Watson. I am not in doubt, but I am perhaps leaning toward the date in August, not having it fixed in my mind and not having made any memorandum. If so many men know it was in August, why, I am not so stubborn that I would not—

The Chairman. It was before the decree was entered?

Mr. Watson. Yes; it was before the decree was entered.

The Chairman. If the decree was entered on the 24th day of August, this conversation which you had with the Bolands must have happened in August?

Mr. Watson. Yes; and that does refresh my mind now, my recollection of the matter. I am satisfied now that it was somewhere about two or three days before that decree, because I remember the fact of the decree coming down and Mr. Boland coming to my office and telling me.

The Chairman. What refreshes your mind and makes you now locate

Mr. WATSON. Yes; and that does refresh my mind now, my recollection of the matter. I am satisfied now that it was somewhere about two or three days before that decree, because I remember the fact of the decree coming down and Mr. Boland coming to my office and tell. The CHAIRMAN. What refreshes your mind and makes you now locate it two or three days before the date of the decree?

Mr. WATSON. Because we were discussing this matter just a day or two before that, and I was surprised to think that the decree came drawn with them, as I understood II.

The CHAIRMAN. The fact that you yourself felt surprised at that time now refreshes your memory about it? Is that so?

Mr. WATSON. Well, no; I would not exactly say that, but I recall the came in the came of the convergence of the came of the ca

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any understanding with the Bolands about the fee that you would get in case the Marian Coal Co. property was sold?

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any understanding with the Bolands about the fee that you would get in case the Marian Coal Co. property was sold?

Mr. WATSON. Why, a business man that assumes to be doing business comes into my office, and he wants to fix the fee, and he does, and he mentions the amount of $5,000 for the fee. I did not need a paper.

The CHAIRMAN. You said "a business man."

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean by that that Boland came into your office?

Mr. WATSON. Why, surely.

The CHAIRMAN. And proposed to give you a fee of $5,000 if you were successful in negotiating the sale of the Marian Coal Co. property?

Mr. WATSON. I do not know that "if I were successful" was mentioned at all. I don't think it was at that time, when he first offered me the $5,000.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Which Boland?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. C. G. Boland. I never talked with W. P. Boland about fees.

The CHAIRMAN. But you do remember that you were to have a fee of $5,000?

Mr. WATSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. On account of the sale of that Marian Coal Co. property?

Mr. WATSON. Surely; that is right; and no other fee—only that.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Watson, will you please look at this paper and see if you ever had the original or a copy of that paper, or ever saw the original or a copy of that paper before?

Mr. WATSON (after examining paper). I have no recollection of ever seeing anything like that before. There is one part of that paper that I remember was discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. This paper reads:

SCRANTON, PA., August 23, 1911.

SCRANTON, PA., August 23, 1911.

C. G. Boland, Esq., Scranton, Pa.

C. G. BOLAND, Esq., Scranton, Pa.

Dear Sir: In reference to the matter of G. M. Watson being taken into the case of the Marian Coal Co. against the D., L. & W., would say, in confirmation of what I told you heretofore, that if through the efforts of Mr. Watson a satisfactory settlement is brought about, the Marian Coal Co. agrees to pay him $5,000 for such settlement.

Of course Mr. H. C. Reynolds has been in this case from the beginning and will be attorney in it until its final settlement.

Very truly, yours,

MARIAN COAL Co., President.

This copy has a blank and the word "President" underneath; but did you see a paper of which this is exactly a copy with the exception that Mr. W. P. Boland's name is omitted from this paper at present? You say you saw no such paper?

Mr. WATSON. There is one paragraph there—I do remember a conversation in which Mr. Reynolds was named as being the attorney in the rate case. If that is what they mean, in the rate case—that is, the matter before the Commerce Commission—and Mr. Reynolds was to receive some money out of this money that I got from the Lackawanns if I were to get it. I know we did talk about that, and I think the fee was fixed by W. P. Boland at $12,500, or something like that. Now, that is my recollection of it.

The CHAIRMAN. You were to have a fee, then, from the Bolands for the sale of the Marlan Coal Co. property, but no fee in the Interstate Commerce Court case?

Mr. WATSON. Oh, no; it was altogether. It was altogether, but Mr. Reynolds was not their attorney in the Marlan Coal Co. case in the United States court, Mr. Reynolds was the attorney before the Interstate Commerce Commission. Mr. Donnelly was the attorney in the United States court, and Mr. Reynolds did not appear there, so far as I know.

"The CHAIRMAN I should like to have you tall the committee inst

United States court, and Mr. Reynolds did not appear there, so far as I know.

The Chairman. I should like to have you tell the committee just exactly what you were employed to do.

Mr. Watson. I was employed finally, after we got down and talked it all over—there were a number of meetings before we got down to what I was to do. I was to present the rate claim to the Lackawanna Railroad, and collect from them—well, something in the neighborhood of $300,000. Three hundred and some odd thousand dollars was the claim, and I whittled it down to about sixty, and told them that that was all they could get, if they got anything. They had some exemplary damages, and it piled up four times the amount of the freight, or something of that sort; and I whittled that down to the actual damages as allowed under the law, and it amounted to about $60,000, as I recall it. The coal property was to be $100,000, and the $60,000 made $161,000 when added together, and that is what I asked the Lackawanna Railroad—$161,000.

The Chairman, Did Judge Archbald have anything to do, by way of suggestions or assistance to you, with your negotiations for the settlement of that matter against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad?

Mr. Warson, My recollection is that Judge Archbald said he would settlement of that matter against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad?

Mr. Watson. My recollection is that Judge Archbald said he would give me an introduction to Mr. Loomis. My recollection is that Judge Archbald did not do it.

The Chairman. That he did not do what?

Mr. Watson. That he did not give me the introduction. The Chairman. He did not give you the letter?

Mr. Watson. He did not. I still have a recollection that Judge Archbald said that he had written a letter—that is, that he told me he had—to Mr. Loomis.

The Chairman. Do you remember when he told you that, that he had written it?

Mr. Watson. It was right after I was over in the office looking up Mr. Watson. It was right after I was over in the office looking up

The CHAIRMAN. Do you remember when he told you that, that he had written it?

Mr. Warson. It was right after I was over in the office looking up the record. Now, I have an indistinct recollection that that is what he said, that he would introduce me. In the first place, I never had met Loomis, and Loomis was coming to Scranton every two weeks, as remarkable as that may be, and he was around the clubs there; but I never happened to meet him, and I regretted that when I was-talking about endeavoring to make a settlement, that I did not know Mr. Loomis, who was the man we would have to settle with. He was at the head of the coal department. Judge Archbald said, "Why, I know him very well, and I will give you a letter"—something of that sort. He never gave me the letter. Now, whether he wrote a letter or not. I don't know; but my recollection is that he told me that: but that did not make the meeting, because I have a carbon copy of the very letter that we had the meeting on right here, and I know when it happened, pretty nearly, now.

The Chairman. What is that paper you have?

Mr. Warson. It is a carbon copy of a letter dated October 2, 1911.

Exhibit 86.

Mr. E. E. Loomis, Vice President Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., 99 West Street, New York City.

Dear Sir: In relation to a matter existing between the Marian Coal Co. and your road and coal department, and also a claim against the traffic department of your road, which I have had under consideration here and with which I pressme you are more or less familiar, I decided, after a conference with your Mr. Phillips, of the coal department, to ask for a meeting with you and the president of your road, Mr. Truesdale, if convenient, at the earliest time you could find your way clear to meet me, either in New York or Scranton. If you will kindly advise me either by wire or letter, I will hold myself in readiness to meet you on a few hours' notice.

I am, very truly, yours,

Thet is not signed but it is my letter, and my carbon conv.

That is not signed, but it is my letter, and my carbon copy.

The foregoing letter was subsequently marked by the stenographer "Exhibit 86." The CHAIRMAN, What date is that?
Mr. WATSON, It is dated October 2, 1911.
The CHAIRMAN, What did you do after that letter? What happened?

The CHARRMAN. What did you do after that letter? What happened?

Mr. Warson. I think that is when the negotiations began with the Bolands. I think they came over, and we talked it over, and I told them what I had done, and, in fact, perhaps they knew that I was a busy week then. We talked a good bit about it, because I expected an answer to this letter saying when they would meet me, and I expected that meeting would take place on the following Monday, because I was advised by Mr. Phillips that Mr. Loomis would be in Scranton on that day, Monday or Tuesday, and there was more or less talk about it. Then, I had gone into the case far enough, if you will pardon me, to know that our claim for damages on account of the shipping charges was not in good shape to present to any company, and that brought the Bolands and myself together more or less during that week.

When we got up to about Thursday or Friday, Mr. C. G. Boland came in my office, and I called his attention to the fact that we would simply go before these people and they would laugh us out of the office; that we would have nothing to stand upon—that is, nothing definite to present to them—in relation to the rate business. He told me then that Henry Meeker, surviving executor of the firm of Meeker & Co., had a case that they had appealed and was going to be argued in the Commerce Court, and he could give me very little information about it, only what the newspapers said or what he had learned from somebody, or what Mr. Reynolds had said or what somebody else had said, and I could get no information about it. So I said to him, "Now, if my conclusions are right, and Mr. Loomis answers this letter, and Mr. Loomis comes to Scranton, he will expect to meet me, and I would like to have something to meet Mr. Loomis with." I said, "The only orderly way to do it is to study the Meeker case, and the only way to study the Meeker case is to get the briefs or get the record, and that is in Washington."

C. G. Boland said, "Well, go down and get it." After some conside in Washington."

C. G. Boland said, "Well, go down and get it; go down and get it."

After some considerable talk, I think the following morning—I am quite sure it was the next day—he came in and asked me if I could go to Washington. Now, as I recall it, that was on the 6th. I won't say the dates, but it was on Friday; I remember that; and I think the 6th day of October. If I am right, I sent a telegram that day, and I think that is the day. Now, I sent that telegram, and wrote it in my office on the day that it is dated, for this reason: I said to Mr. Boland, "It will be Saturday when we go to Washington, and if they do business in Washington as they did 10 or 12 years ago, when I knew something about it, they always go away on Saturday, and we will find the doors closed and locked; and how I can get into any clerk's office on Saturday I don't know."

inbout it, they always go away on Saturday, and we will find the doors closed and locked; and how I can get into any clerk's office on Saturday I don't know."

The Chairman. That was in the good old days.

Mr. Warson. Perhaps, Judge, that might be. I do not know how that was. I was here more then than I have been in recent years. There was some talk about it, and finally it was decided that I would send this telegram to Judge Archbald. Now, I am just as sure as I am that I am here now that Mr. Boland suggested that I send it to Judge Archbald, because we knew him—we all knew him, and he was the only man I did know connected with any of those courts down there. So I wrote that telegram, which I can not exactly repeat, but I remember my wife at that time was down in the Pocono Mountains and I wanted to spend as much time as I could with her, and I did not want to come away and be gone on Sunday or over Sunday without letting her know. So I wired Archbald to wire me if he could met me on Saturday, and to wire me at East Stroudsburg, and I went to Stroudsburg that day. Now, I either went to Stroudsburg at 1.40 or at 3.40, because those are the two trains going down there, and the only two after IO o'clock in the morning, and from there I remember taking an early train, and I came to Washington.

To go back, when I got off the train at East Stroudsburg I received this, which I suppose is responsive to the telegram that I sent him. I presume I asked him what time and place, or something like that, I could see him in Washington, and he answered: "George M. Watson, East Stroudsburg." To go back, it is dated "Washington, D. C."—"Almost any time you wish."

Mr. Floyd. What day of the month?

Mr. Warson. That is dated "10/6/1911."

The Chairman. That is the 6th day of October, 1911, is it not?

Mr. Warson. That is dated "10/6/1911."

The Chairman. The envelope can be pinned to it.

Mr. Warson. This envelope, I judge, was addressed by the boy. I see he has tacked on 20 cents.

The Chairman. Mr. Watson, will you look at thi

Hon. R. W. Archbald, Judge Court of Commerce, Washington, D. C.:

Wire me East Stroudsburg what time to-morrow I can meet you in Washington.

G. M. Watson.

The Chairman. And you say this telegram that you have just referred to, and which is now in the testimony as Exhibit No. 85, was the reply to that telegram that you have just read?

Mr. Watson. I judge so, because it is the only one I received. It must be so. This is my telegram to him, surely.

The Chairman. Yes. Now, do you not know, having looked at this telegram, that the same man who signed "G. M. Watson" to that wrote that date, October 6, at the top of that telegram? Is it not the same handwriting?

Mr. Watson. Well, it may be. I would not say.

The Chairman. Look at it.

Mr. Watson. I did not look at it carefully.

The Chairman. You are familiar with your own handwriting. Did you write that "October 6"?

Mr. Watson. Well, when I look at it sgain—

The Chairman. Look and see if you did not write that.

Mr. Watson. What started me is because it is not the same colored ink as the body of the telegram. That is, it looks as if it might have been written at a different time. But I have no doubt but what I wrote "October 6," since I look at it now.

The Chairman. Is not that your handwriting—"October 6, 1911"?

Mr. Watson. I think so. I think so; yes. I think that is right. It is so, I think. If not, I forgot to date it, and somebody did it.

The Chairman. Because the ink did not look the same color to me; that is all; and I thought it had been dated at another time.

The Chairman. Look now, and see if that ink is not colored exactly like the "G. M. Watson."

Mr. Watson. Well, I did not look at the "G. M. Watson" enough to know.

The Chairman. Perhaps a blotter was used, and it was not spread

The CHAIRMAN. Look now, and see if that ink is not colored exactly like the "G. M. Watson."

Mr. Watson. Well, I did not look at the "G. M. Watson" enough to know.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps a blotter was used, and it was not spread on quite so thickly in the case of the date.

Mr. Watson. Now, pardon me a moment—

The CHAIRMAN. See if it is not the same.

Mr. Watson. I have a little mist here; I will wipe my glasses, and then I can look at that more carefully. I am an expert on handwriting, and I can tell that in about a minute, as it impresses me, anyhow. [After examining paper.] Well, on reflection, I would say that it was the same color and written at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. The whole, every word, from start to finish?

Mr. WATSON. Well, the body of the telegram looks darker to me, but I wrote it.

The CHAIRMAN. The body of the telegram is darker than your signature, is it not?

Mr. WATSON. It is darker than my signature and darker than "October 6."

The CHAIRMAN. The "October 6." and your signature seem to be exactly the same shade or color.

Mr. WATSON. They do; the same shade. Oh, there is no question about this telegram, Judge. I wrote it. It was written in my office and handed to—

The CHAIRMAN. I did not think so, but you expressed a little doubt in the beginning.

Mr. WATSON. There is no question at all about it.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not know how material it was; but still I thought it was well enough to have you bring out what is manifestly the truth about it.

Mr. WATSON. There is no question at all about it.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know how material it was; but still I thought it was well enough to have you bring out what is manifestly the truth about it.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question at all about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The was that the first conversation that the Bolands talked to you before that decree was rendered about the Meeker case, did he not?

Mr. WATSON. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. At the first conversation that the Bolands had with you? Is not that what you said?

Mr. WATSON. When M

Mr. WATSON. When Mr. W. F. Bound came over, when we were talking about it.

The CHAIRMAN. When was that?
Mr. WATSON. Oh, within two or three days.
The CHAIRMAN. That was before the decree was rendered in the Marian Coal Co. case?
Mr. WATSON. I would say so.
The CHAIRMAN. When and where was the Meeker case decided?
Mr. WATSON. Really, I do not know. I got the books down there on the 6th of October, and my recollection is that it was argued on the 8th of October.

The CHAIRMAN. Argued where?
Mr. WATSON. In the Commerce Court. I got these books from the clerk or a deputy marshal, or somebody who gave them to me down in the office there, and I brought them along. I remember reading it a day or so after I had been down here that it was argued; and it was in the New York papers.
The CHAIRMAN. Had it been decided when Boland mentioned the Meeker case to you?
Mr. WATSON. Had it been decided how?
The CHAIRMAN. Had the Meeker case been decided by the Commerce Court?
Mr. WATSON. My recollection is, from the examination that I made

The CHAIRMAN. Had the Meeker case been decided by the Commerce Court?

Mr. Watson. My recollection is, from the examination that I made and from what he said to me, that the Interstate Commerce Commission had found in favor of Meeker and that the railroad company had taken an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. To what court?

Mr. Watson. To the Interstate Commerce Court, I presume, you know. I did not know them.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you remember the status of that case before the Commerce Court at that time?

Mr. Watson I do not

Mr. Watson. I do not.

The Chairman. You do not know when the decision of the Meeker case was reached in the Commerce Court, do you?

Mr. Watson. I do not. I think, though—well, I do not know as to the decision. I know the argument was a few days after I was here. The case was argued, because I remember seeing it in the possesser. newspaper.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you not say you came down here to learn something about the Meeker case?

Mr. Watson. I came down to find out what had been done. I did not know what the Interstate Commerce Court had done, except some little stuff you would read in a newspaper, and I thought I could get the record, and when I came they gave me these books.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you then find out what had been done in the Commerce Court?

Mr. Watson. Why, surely. It was on appeal, waiting to be argued. These, I take it, are the paper books containing the case and its history. The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever have any other conversation with Judge Archbald about this case of the Marian Coal Co. other than that you have mentioned?

Mr. Watson. I have seen Judge Archbald so infrequently that I can not recall what we did talk about. He has been down here, and comes up on a flying visit, and I may meet him and talk about something, but I do not recall having talked with him about this case. It seems to me, though, that there was something said one time about my efforts with the Lackawanna; but what it was I could not gather now to tell you.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Webb desires to ask you some questions.

Mr. Webb. Mr. Watson, have you a letter from the judge stating that this whole transaction was off and could not be settled?

Mr. Watson. No, no.

Mr. Webb. Did you ever get such a letter?

Mr. Watson. No, no.

Mr. Webb. Did you ever receive a letter from Judge Archbald in your life in reference to this matter?

Mr. Watson. No, I did not know that Judge Archbald knew it was off, really. I did not know that he knew that I had failed. I never knew that—that he knew it—unless I told him casually. I never knew that he knew it. I knew that I had failed, but I did not know that he knew it.

Mr. Webb. You know C. G. Boland, do you not, Mr. Watson.

that he knew it. I knew that I had failed, but I did not know that he knew it.

Mr. Webb. You know C. G. Boland, do you not, Mr. Watson?

Mr. Watson. Yes; I know him very well. That is, I thought I did. I do not know whether I do or not.

Mr. Webb. How is that?

Mr. Watson. I thought I knew him very well, but I do not know.

Mr. Webb. You think he is as good a man as you have in your county, do you not? Is he not a good man, a man of good character?

Mr. Watson. I would rather not make comparisons.

Mr. Webb. Is he not a man of good character

Mr. Watson. I do not know.

Mr. Webb. You do not know?

But it is your word against his now, and you have admitted here in the beginning that your memory is weak.

and you have admitted here in the beginning that your memory is weak.

Mr. Watson. I did not say any such thing.

Mr. Webb. And that for the last year you can not recollect things; they are rather hazy to you, I thought you said.

Mr. Watson. I did not say my memory was weak.

Mr. Webb. What did you say about your memory?

Mr. Watson. I said I did not remember as well as I did once.

Mr. Watson. I said I did not remember as well as I did once.

Mr. Watson. Yes; but I had a memory once that I did not have to have discounted in any way.

Mr. Webb. It is not as good as it was, then?

Mr. Watson. Perhaps it is when I get fired up a little; I think it is just as good as it was then.

Mr. Webb. Well, let us get fired up, then.

Mr. Watson. I think I can recall everything that happened in my life right now; but it will take an effort to do it, and if I go moving along, why perhaps I may make a mistake. I might get twisted on a date; I don't know how that would be. But I will remember you as long as I live; that is, unless something happens to me that has not yet. I have a very good recollection of faces and facts.

Mr. Webb. That is because you are fired up now. A week from now you might not.

Mr. Watson. No, sir; I am not fired up. You never saw me when I was illuminated.

Mr. Webb.
you might not.
Mr. Warson. No, sir; I am not fired up.
Mr. Warson. No, sir; I am not fired up.
was illuminated.
Mr. Webb. When you are what?
Mr. Warson. When I get a little bit excited on these matters, sometimes I say things.
Mr. Webb. I hope you will not get excited here.
Mr. Warson. I will not, sir; I have too much respect for the committee.

I do not care how many things you remember, just so

Mr. Warson. I will not, sir; I have too much respect for the committee.

Mr. Warson. I will not, sir; I have too much respect for the committee.

Mr. Webb. I do not care how many things you remember, just so you remember them.

Mr. Warson. Yes, sir.

Mr. Webb. The thing I am getting at is that Mr. C. G. Boland, who you say you thought was a man of good character until this investigation, testified that Judge Archbald told him over the telephone to come over to his office, and when he went over to his office you and he were there talking together and discussing this very transaction; that something was said about the fee, and you mentioned $5,000 as being a proper fee, and the judge assented, saying that that was about right, and that you and he went down to this attorney—what was the name of that attorney? Anyway, it was suggested by Judge Archbald that that statement ought to be put in writing, and thereupon it was put in writing. Now, do you say that is absolutely false?

Mr. Warson. I say that it is absolutely false, and I never heard of it in my life until I saw something of it in this record, and heard it here to-day—never. It could not have happened. Now, I qualify: I don't mean to say that I did not meet C. G. Boland in Judge Archbald's office, because that is a thing that I would not make note of. It may have happened, some time, that I met him there. It may have happened that he was there about this particular time. But the latter part of that question, that there was ever a discussion in the presence of Judge Archbald about my fee—either I was dumb and deaf, or it never happened there.

Mr. Webb. Did Mr. C. G. Boland ever come into the judge's office and find you and the judge together?

Mr. Webb. Yes; C. G. Boland, the man we are talking about now. Do you swear that you and Judge Archbald were never together in his office when C. G. Boland came in and found you there together?

Mr. Webb. Yes; at any time.

Mr. Warson. No; but you say, "Did I ever."?

Mr. Warson. No; but you say, "Did I ever."?

Mr. W

Mr. Watson. Well, now, I don't know but what Boland was there a hundred times in Judge Archbald's office when I was there; but at this particular time I have no recollection of meeting Boland in Judge Archbald's office, and I am positive that he never was there.

Mr. Webb. Do you remember your ever being in Judge Archbald's office in company with him, and C. G. Boland coming into the office at that time?

Mr. Watson. No; I do not.

Mr. Watson. No; I do not.

Mr. Watson. Well, I say, I don't know but what he may have come in the office while I was there, sometimes, but in regard to this particular time I don't remember it if he did. But I would not deny it if Mr. Boland said that some time he had met me there. Maybe he did.

Mr. Webb. Then maybe it was about the time this suit was being discussed.

lan. Mr. russ

Mr. WATSON. Well, I say, I don't know but what he may have come in the office while I was there, sometimes, but in regard to this particular time I don't remember it if he did. But I would not deny it If Mr. Boland salb. Then maybe it was about the time this suit was being discussed.

Mr. WATSON. Hen maybe it was about the time this suit was being its was not because there never was any such discussion; and if this discussion was a part of that visit, it is not so. Mr. Webb. Did you and the judge discuss it then?

Mr. WATSON. Never.

Mr. WATSON. Hend Group go to see him for, then?

Mr. WATSON. He had a frebald?

Mr. WATSON. I will all you what I went over there to get at the records, to find out the status of the Peale case. Now, that is what well.

Mr. WATSON. He had.

Mr. WEBB. And you went over to get it from the judge Instead of from the clerk?

Mr. WATSON. He had.

Mr. WEBB. What did you go for? You just said that that is what you went for, did you not?

Mr. WATSON. He had.

Mr. Wats

day, that I did.

Mr. Webb. "The chances are, if you went;
definite.

Mr. Warson. That particular day I don't know whether I went

Mr. Warson. That particular day I don't know whether I went

"Grad up" a little you may remember it.

MI. WEBE. "The chances are, if you went? That is not very definite.

Mr. WATSON. That particular day I don't know whether I went or not.

Mr. WEBE. If you will get "fired up" a little you may remember it. Mr. WATSON. I can not recall whether I went to the judge's office that day—an office that I go into very frequently, in a building that I am in every day. I can not recall that.

Mr. WEBE. Do you know whether you went to the clerk's office before you saw the judge or not?

Mr. WATSON. I am quite sure that I did.

Mr. WEBE. Would you not want to get an introduction to Mr. Loomis before you began to look up the case?

Mr. WATSON. I don't think it would be necessary for me to do that. Mr. WEBE. Can you tell when it was you saw the judge when you discussed this case?

Mr. WATSON. It may have been that day, and it may have been the next day, or it may have been the next day. It was within two or three days of the time that I went to the clerk's office. It may have been the day I went to the clerk's office.

Mr. WEBE. Did you ever tell him what fee you were going to get out of it?

Mr. WATSON. I do not think I ever spoke of the fee to him in my life.

Mr. WEBE. Verne Well you ever you you have been the fee to him in my life.

Mr. Warson. I do not think I ever spoke of the fee to him in my life. Mr. Webb. Will you swear you did not? Mr. Warson. I think so; yes, sir. I can swear to that.

Mr. Webb. You think you will swear to it?
Mr. Warson. Yes, sir: I can swear to it?
Mr. Warson. Not that I recall. I can not recall ever talking with him about fees.
Mr. Webb. Your memory is all right now, is it?
Mr. Warson. Not that I recall. I can not recall ever talking with him about fees.
Mr. Webb. Your memory is all right now, is it?
Mr. Warson. It is all right on fees; yes. When you say "fees" to me I remember it.
Mr. Warson. Well, I don't know him intimately now. I know him as a man that I have met on the street. I have talked with him to say "Good morning," and he has said that same thing to me for years. I knew him when he worked, I think, for the Lackawanna, and perhaps for the Jonesce.
Mr. Webb. Yes.
Mr. Webb. Yes.
Mr. Warson. That Mr. Williams had suggested me?
Mr. Warson. That Mr. Williams had suggested me?
Mr. Warson. No; I am sure of that. Mr. Williams would not appeal to me, anything that he might say.
Mr. Warson. No; I am sure of that. Mr. Williams would not appeal to me, anything that he might say.
Mr. Warson. They say the reason why they got you was because Williams had suggested you.
Mr. Warson. They say the reason why they got you was because Williams had suggested you.
Mr. Warson. They say the reason why they got you was because Williams had suggested you.
Mr. Warson. They thought was a friend of Williams's?
Mr. Warson. They did not.
Mr. Warson. I can not help Judge Archbald's picking his associated with Ed. Williams upon any subject I would deny it, sir.
Mr. Warson. I can not help Judge Archbald's picking his associates; it is none of my business.
Mr. Warson. I can not help Judge Archbald's picking his associates; it is none of my business.
Mr. Warson. How you pick yours outside of Williams?
Mr. Warson. I ought to know; I got clubbed have had some very

Mr. Webb. What is the most important integration.

Mr. Webb. What is the most important integration.

Mr. Warson. In that court? Well, sir, I don't like to say what I have done in that court. I defended a man, by appointment, for selling whisky to Indians. That is one case I had there. That was a very important matter. As a matter of fact, I have not practiced in the Federal court since Judge Archbald has been on the bench.

Mr. Webb. Then you have been thrown with him very little in a local way?

Federal court since Judge Archbald has been on the bench.

Mr. Webb. Then you have been thrown with him very little in a legal way?

Mr. Warson. Well, there were reasons why I did not at that time. I don't care to discuss them here. They were personal reasons.

Mr. Webb. You have had very little practice in that court, and the only case you can remember is that of defending a man for selling whisky to Indians?

Mr. Warson. No; I have tried half a dozen. I have tried a dozen cases there, perhaps. I do not recall them now.

Mr. Webb. Were all of them liquor cases?

Mr. Warson. I remember one case, somebody against—it was a small matter, anyhow. I think I tried an insurance case there; not very much. I have not tried as many cases in the United States court since Archbald has been there as I did before. I was trying quite a good bit there before that time.

Mr. Webb. There was no court there?

Archand has been there as I did before. I was trying quite a good bit there before that time.

Mr. Webb. There was no court there?

Mr. Warson. Oh, yes, there was—oh, yes. That court was established about 25 years ago—23 or 24 years ago.

Mr. Webb. Was it abolished?

Mr. Warson. It was not. The court came there from Pittsburgh and met and had its regular terms in Scranton for a number of years.

Mr. Webb. Oh, yes; but they did not have a judge?

Mr. Warson. They did not have a judge; no.

Mr. Webb. When you went to see the judge did you ask him to write you a letter to Loomis, or did he volunteer it? "Fire up" a little on that point.

Mr. Warson. I could not tell you that.

Mr. Webb. That is very important for us to know.

Mr. Warson. I could not tell you whether he volunteered it or not; but I think that the statement I made, that I did not know Mr. Loomis, brought forth some response from Judge Archbald. It was either that "I know him very well," or "He comes here very frequently," and I asked him to write that letter for me, or he said, "I will introduce you to him," or something like that.

Mr. Webb. He never introduced you to him, anyway?

Mr. Watson. He never did. He may have written the letter. I don't know how that was.

Mr. Webb. Did he write the letter?

Mr. Watson. Well, now, I don't know.

Mr. Webb. Did he ever tell you he had written it?

Mr. Watson. I think he has said something about writing a letter.

Mr. Watson. Yes; I am quite sure that he told me he had said something to Loomis. Now, he either told me he met Loomis or he had written a letter to him.

Mr. Webb. That he had met Loomis?

Mr. Watson. He told me one or the other of those things. I can't recall now whether it was meeting Loomis or whether he wrote the letter to him.

Mr. Webb. You explained what you wanted to do to the judge; you explained to him that you wanted some intercession, or wanted to meet Loomis; you explained that you wanted to sell or unload this coal washery on the Lackawanna Railroad and settle the Commerce Commission case, and that you needed Loomis's influence, or you had to reach Loomis in some way or other?

Mr. Watson. To put it in that way, I don't think I did.

Mr. Webb. Is that the substance of it?

Mr. Watson. It was substantially this: That I needed an introduction, or at least I thought I did, to Mr. Loomis; and I could have had it from a hundred men in Scranton just as well as from Judge Archbald.

Mr. Webb. You say you journeyed all the way from Scranton, Pa., down here, to get these few little paper books?

Archbald.

Mr. Webb. You say you journeyed all the way from Scranton, Pa., down here, to get these few little paper books?

Mr. Watson. Yes, sir; I did.

Mr. Webb. And telegraphed Judge Archbald before you would come?

Mr. Watson. Yes, sir; I did.

Mr. Webb. Did you think he was the custodian of papers of that kind?

Mr. Watson. I know he was not

Air. WATSON. Yes, sir; I did.
Mr. Webb. Did you think he was the custodian of papers of that kind?
Mr. Watson. I knew he was not.
Mr. Webb. You knew he was not?
Mr. Webb. You want to know if he was in Washington for, and if he could meet you at a certain hour?
Mr. Watson. I did not say a certain hour, I think.
Mr. Webb. You wanted to know what time, what hour, he could meet you, did you not?
Mr. Watson. I don't know that I did. I asked if he could meet me—what day; if he would be here that day, Saturday. I didn't know what time I would get here.
Mr. Webb. Your language is, "Wire me East Stroudsburg what time to-morrow I can meet you."
Did you think that telegram was necessary to know what time you could meet him to get those two little paper books you speak of there?
Mr. Watson. Yes, I thought so.
Mr. Webb. Those briefs?
Mr. Watson. Yes, sir; I thought so.
Mr. Webb. Those briefs?
Mr. Watson. Because I expected to meet Mr. Truesdale and Mr. Loomis on Monday, and this was on Friday, and I could not get the books back there in time, and I wanted to familiarize myself with the Meeker case so that I could talk rates. I never had had anyone with intelligence enough to talk about the rates to me.
Mr. Webb. What did you want to see Judge Archbald in connection with it for? Could you not go to see Truesdale—he was president of the road, was he not?
Mr. Webb. What did you want to come down here and see Judge Archbald for?
Mr. Watson. I think Mr. Boland—Mr. C. G. Boland—suggested that we wire Judge Archbald, because I said I knew no one connected with

Mr. WATSON, I think Mr. Boland—Mr. C. G. Boland—suggested that we wire Judge Archbald, because I said I knew no one connected with

Mr. Warson. I think Mr. Boland—Mr. C. G. Boland—suggested that we wire Judge Archbald, because I said I knew no one connected with the court.

Mr. Waebb. You honestly did not think you could get into the court and get these records without the judge being here?

Mr. Warson. I did not, on Saturday; no; I did not think so.

Mr. Warson. No. And I want to say right now to you that there was only one man there in that place when I went there, except Judge Archbald—only one man, floating around there, doing something, and I don't know what his business was. Finally another man came in, and the judge called him in and introduced him to me, either as the clerk or a marshal or a deputy somebody, and then I asked him about these books, and he went in and got them.

Mr. Webb. You asked whom?

Mr. Warson. This man that came there. Now, there was no one in the building.

Mr. Webb. After you had come down from Scranton to Washington to get two books, you did not even ask the judge for them, did you? You asked this other man?

Mr. Warson. I think I did. We stood there talking, and I think the judge asked him for them. I am not sure about that.

Mr. Warson. I think I did. We stood there talking, and I think the judge asked him for them. I am not sure about that.

Mr. Warson. I know somebody got these books for me that was not Judge Archbald. Now, I don't know who it was. I know that he was introduced to me by Judge Archbald, and I presume that I asked him to get the books. Now, if I did not ask him to get the books, perhaps Judge Archbald said, "Mr. Watson wants the briefs in that case," or something like that. Now, that may have been said there.

Mr. Webb. Yes.

Mr. Warson. We talked about Mrs. Archbald for a while, and we talked about the weather. It was raining right good and sharp, I remember. We talked about a few other things; but to talk about these books or this case, I should judge it would consume about five minutes, or two minutes, maybe.

Mr. Warson. I don't think so.

Mr. Webb. You came down here from Scranton to

Mr. Watson. I don't think I did. Mr. Webb. You did not tell him what you wanted the books for, did

Mr. Watson. Oh, well, we may have talked about it. I may have id: "I am going to meet the Lackawanna folks," or something like Mr. Warson. Ob, well, we may have talked about it. I may have said: "I am going to meet the Lackawanna folks," or something like that.

Mr. Webb. When you come to these important matters can you not remember a little better? Did you do it?

Mr. Warson. Well, it is a matter that of course I did not charge my mind particularly with, but I have no doubt in my mind—

Mr. Webb. You charged your mind with knowing that you did talk about Mrs. Archbald and the rainy weather.

Mr. Warson. That would be the thing that I would naturally talk about—something that he was interested in and that I would be interested in.

about—something that he was interested in and that I would be interested in.

Mr. Webb. You remember that, though?

Mr. Webb. Your business here was looking after this particular case, and you can not tell the committee whether or not you discussed this case with the judge and told him that you were to meet Truesdale the following Monday; can you?

Mr. Watson. I came down here, not to discuss the case I was settling with the Lackawanna, but to get the information that had been brought out before the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is what I was here for.

Mr. Webb. Yes; and you got it all in these two little briefs?

Mr. Watson. Such is the case.

Mr. Webb. And you got the judge to get them for you, or got them in his presence, and never told him what you were going to do with them?

Mr. Webb. And you got the judge to get them for you, or got them in his presence, and never told him what you were going to do with them?

Mr. Watson. I assume I may have said, "I am going to try and settle it, and I wanted to get familiar with the Meeker case."

Mr. Webb. Why do you assume it? You are on your oath now. Did you do it?

Mr. Watson. Well, I can not tell you.

Mr. Webb. You can not tell?

Mr. Watson. I can not.

Mr. Webb. You will not even assume that, then?

Mr. Watson. I can not.

Mr. Watson. I can not say positively that I said to him that I was going to settle that case on Monday, or expected to meet these people on Monday; but it is a hundred to one that I did say something of that kind.

Mr. Webb. A hundred to one?

Mr. Watson. Yes.

Mr. Webb. That is pretty big odds; is it not?

Mr. Watson. But I can not remember. I don't remember that I called him off in one corner and said: "I am going to meet the Lackawanna people Monday," or anything like that. I don't think I ever did that.

Mr. Webb. I said nothing about your calling him off in a corner.

Mr. Watson. I don't know what we said. We talked along the same as people that are reasonably honest would talk?

Mr. Watson. Yes; and we don't charge our minds with everything we say, either.

Mr. Watson. I remember that, because I got most beautifully wet.

Mr. Webb. Exactly; but you charged your mind with the part about the rainy weather and the part about Mrs. Archbald?

Mr. Webb. Exactly; but you charged your mind with the part about the rainy weather and the part about Mrs. Archbald?

Mr. Webb. Let me ask you this question: Is it not the fact that you have not charged your mind about this matter because you did come down here to see him and tell him the negotiations were hanging up, and that he must do something to help you?

Mr. Watson. If I ever said that, sit, I want to meet my God above and have him condemn me forever; if I ever said to him, "You must help me to settle a case." I never said it in my life to any man living, not only Judge Ar man—never.

Mr. Webb. How many do you pin it to?
Mr. Watson. To enough so that I know I am going to get something in return.
Mr. Webb. Did you leave Washington the same day?
Mr. Watson. I did, at night.
Mr. Watson. I did, at night.
Mr. Webb. At night?
Mr. Watson. Yes, sir; and I went to New York.
Mr. Webb. On the following Monday you met Truesdale?
Mr. Watson. Oh, I don't know now; it may have been Tuesday. It was Monday or Tuesday. It was Monday or Tuesday. It was right on the heels of this that I met him right there.

Mr. Warson. Oh, I don't know now; it may have been Tuesday. It was Monday or Tuesday. It was right on the heels of this that I met him right there.

Mr. Webb. It was Monday or Tuesday, you say?
Mr. Warson. I think so.
Mr. Webb. You went from here to New York?
Mr. Warson. I did.
Mr. Webb. Do you know what day you got to New York?
Mr. Warson. I do. It was on the Sabbath of the Lord.
Mr. Webb. The Sabbath of the Lord?
Mr. Warson. Yes, sir.
Mr. Webb. All Sabbaths are the Sabbaths of the Lord, are they not?
Mr. Warson. Yes; some of them. In New York they are. I don't know how they are down here.
Mr. Webb. Then do you remember whether you saw Truesdale on the day following the Sabbath, or was it Tuesday?
Mr. Warson. Well, now, I know my movements and I can tell you. I went from New York the following morning.
I went to New York because it was late that night, and I stayed there that night. I could not get home from Philadelphia, and I had to go to East Stroudsburg. I went up there on Sunday morning some time. I went to Scranton, I think, perhaps, Monday morning early, and maybe Sunday night—there are two trains that I used to go up on—and I went to my office. Now, I imagine that Loomis came in there on Monday afternoon, and it would be Tuesday morning if that is true.
Mr. Webb. That was in New York?
Mr. Warson. No, no; in Scranton.
Mr. Webb. That was in New York?
Mr. Warson. I think it would be about Tuesday morning?
Mr. Warson. Well, how can I charge my mind and carry along whether it was Tuesday morning or Monday morning? I can not do it. It was within a day or so of this.
Mr. Webb. And who else?
Mr. Warson. Wes, Phillips; I remember seeing him.
Mr. Webb. Phillips was there?

Mr. Watson. I think Mr. Phillips introduced me to Mr. Loomis. I had met Mr. Truesdale before. I think Mr. Phillips introduced me to Mr. Loomis.
Mr. Webb. You knew Truesdale; you had met him, and you were not at a disadvantage with him like you were with Loomis?
Mr. Watson. Well, yes; at some banquet or some meeting or other I was introduced to him, some time.
Mr. Watson. Truesdale?
Mr. Watson. Truesdale?
Mr. Watson. Truesdale?
Mr. Watson. I never met him on this matter, except the one day; that is, that morning when we did meet there.
Mr. Watson. I never met him on this matter, except the one day; that is, that morning when we did meet there.
Mr. Watson. Well, now, it may have been when they opened the depot at Scranton; it may have been at some function where they had given a banquet or something of that kind.
Mr. Watson. Wo.
Mr. Webb. Do you remember ever speaking to him about this case?
Mr. Watson. No.
Mr. Webb. Except in the conference?
Mr. Watson. No. Inc.
Mr. Watson. No. I never talked to Mr. Truesdale on coal at all.
Mr. Floyd. Mr. Watson, when you left Washington you went from here to New York, did you?
Mr. Watson. No. I never talked to Mr. Truesdale on coal at all.
Mr. Floyd. Watson, when you left Washington you went from here to New York, did you?
Mr. Watson. I did not have any business in New York?
Mr. Watson. I did not have any business there. I went to New York in order to get home.
Mr. Floyd. That was on your way home?
Mr. Watson. Oh, my way home would have been to have gotten off at Philadelphia and gone up from Philadelphia to Stroudsburg. My wife was on the mountain at Stroudsburg. We had broken up house-keeping for several months, and they were out on the mountain, and I had to go to Stroudsburg over the Lackawanna. The Belvidere division of the Pennsylvania Railroad runs infrequent trains, and I could not find out if I could get up at all for the first 100 miles from Stroudsburg; and knowing the line from New York runs trains daily, and what they were, I went to New York and got there at midn

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, sir.
Mr. FLOYD. What did you offer them this property for; what consideration?
Mr. WATSON. $161,000.
Mr. FLOYD. $161,000?
Mr. WATSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. FLOYD. What did the Bolands agree to take for the property when they made the agreement to pay you $5,000?
Mr. WATSON. Well, now, that will require some little explanation.
Mr. FLOYD. No; that will not require any explanation.
Mr. FLOYD. No; that will not require any explanation.
Mr. WATSON. Why, they agreed to pay, after we had gotten through—

Mr. Watson. Well, now, that will require some little explanation.

Mr. Floyd. No; that will not require any explanation.

Mr. Floyd. My, they agreed to pay, after we had gotten through—

Mr. Floyd. I want the first of it.

Mr. Watson. First, $100,000.

Mr. Floyd. At the time you said they agreed to pay you $5,000 for your services.

Mr. Watson. S100,000.

Mr. Floyd. That is the point I wanted to get you to state.

Mr. Watson. Yes, sir.

Mr. Floyd. And out of that $100,000, if the deal was closed and a sale effected, you were to receive $5,000?

Mr. Watson. Yes, sir.

Mr. Floyd. And out of that $100,000 proposition up to these business; that is it.

Mr. Floyd. You never put that $100,000 proposition up to these railroad people at all, did you?

Mr. Watson. No, sir; I never did.

Mr. Floyd. Will you explain why it was that you did not?

Mr. Watson. No, sir; I never did.

Mr. Floyd. Will you explain why it was that you find not?

Mr. Watson. From the first time that the price was fixed at $100,000, the property that was to be passed had changed very materially. There were different things to be done with it, and then when they offered this property first there was no two-thirds interest offered. The Marian Coal Co. in its entirety was offered to me.

Mr. Floyd. For $100,000?

Mr. Watson. For $100,000?

Mr. Watson. For $100,000?

Mr. Watson. For $100,000 That would include the suit—well, I may say the suit; yes. There was the Peale matter; Mr. Peale had $16,000, which was admitted. Mr. Peale finally got a judgment stated for thirty-odd thousand dollars, $24,000, or something like that. Now, that was hanging fire over there, and I didn't know that that was a part of this transaction when I first undertook to handle this for $100,000. Now, there was another thing that I didn't know, and that is that one-third of this stock that represented the Marian Coal Co. was in Mr. Peale's hands and belonged to him. That is two things that I didn't know about. The first, the increased indebtedness, the $16,000, I did get an idea that to the $161,000, and I was to make that up on the rates. That is what was to happen.

Mr. Floyd. Which one of the Bolands agreed to that?

Mr. Watson. My recollection is that there was only one Boland that talked about railroad rates, and that was W. P. Boland. The conversations I had with him about railroad rates were when he had the papers there and could show from the papers what had been going on and the discrimination in the rates. Now, I am quite sure he would come to my office, and we would go over that. I imagine it was no one but Mr. W. P. Boland. I never talked about rates with C. G. Boland, because he knew nothing about them.

Mr. Floyd. You say you imagine it was W. P. Boland?

Mr. Watson. Yes; alone.

Mr. Floyd. What is your memory about it?

Mr. WATSON. Oh, I think it was—no one else.
Mr. FLOYD. You think it was W. P. Boland?
Mr. WATSON. Yes; I am sure C. G. Boland was never present when we talked raliroad rates, because he knew nothing about it and con-

Me taked railroad rates, steps of the season of the season you might study up a particular case in order to get anowedge of those rates?

Mr. Warson. No, no, no.

Mr. Flodd. And then did you not testify that you left Washington after you had your interview with Judge Archbald, went home by way of New York, because you were able to get there quicker in that way, or you were led to understand you could, and then went from there home, and then, just in a day or two after that, you met Loomis and Truesdale in Scranton and made this proposition to them, which they refused? Did you not testify to that?

Mr. Warson. Yes, sir; I say that I read that book through three or four times.

Mr.

bome and then, just in a day or two after that, you met Loomis and Truesdale in Scranton and made this proposition to them, which they full followed in Scranton and made this proposition to them, which they four times.

Mr. Warson. Yes, sir; I say that I read that book through three or four times.

Mr. Flovp. When did this great time intervene after you learned something about rates up to the time that you made this proposition, so that you changed the proposition, on that Boland changed the proposition, and you added $60,000?

Mr. Warson. Oh, no; that is wrong. You don't understand me. This $161,000 was a price that was agreed upon possibly two or three weeks before I went to New York. I knew what I had to ask them, and that was the reason I did not have the data. I did not know that the court had done in the Meeker case. That is a failes of anthracite coal growing out of occurrences within 16 or 20 miles of where this place was located.

Mr. Flove. That was a case entirely separate from and independent of the Boland case was located.

Mr. Flove. All you got out of that case was the decision of the court and the evidence—

Mr. Warson. Oh, not much evidence.

Mr. Flove. Supparison of that case with the facts in this Boland case you expected to get some information that you did not possess in regard to this rate matter?

Mr. Warson. Yes, sir; I wanted to know how they handled a case of this kind.

Mr. Flove. William P. Boland did not know anything about rates?

Mr. Warson. Oh, he did. He told me the best he could. I may have been dull and did not get hold of it right—I do not know—but he told me many times about the rates. I think Boland had fortified himself well—W. P. Boland. I think he did know about the rates, and he knew the distance and the differences, and he knew where they had charged a little more for one distance than for another.

Mr. Flove. What is your explanation of coming down to Washington to see Judge Archbald. I came to get these books, because that Meeker case was a decision directly from the

Mr. Watson. Now you are speaking of rates.
Mr. Floyd. Coal and certain other things; not rates altogether, but their entire claim was $100,000?
Mr. Watson. Yes, elr.
Mr. Floyd. And you finally whittled it down to about sixty thousand?
Mr. Watson. Yes; that is, rates; that is, in relation to the rate matters.

Mr. FLOYD. When did you do that whittling down?

Mr. Watson. That was, perhaps, while I was working at the case, within a week or so of my coming down to New York. I was quite busy on this case for a week.

Mr. FLOYD. Within a week or so of your coming down to Washington?

Mr. Watson. To Washington; yes. It was during that period when we knew, or expected to meet these people; that is when we were doing that.

we knew, or expected to meet these people; that is when we were doing that.

Mr. Floyd. If you had that whittled down before you came down to Washington, until, in your judgment, they would not be warranted in claiming more than fifty or sixty thousand dollars by reason of this price, then let me ask you again to explain why it was that you left Washington, went by way of New York home, met Truesdale and Loomis in Scranton, and asked $160,000 or $170,000 for this property?

Mr. Watson. I can explain it to you very quickly. There was a certain price fixed on the rates. Those two together, as they were originally put up, would amout to nearly a half a million dollars. I can not give you the exact figures, but pretty near that. When we got at the rates, and I found that the punitive damage idea would have to be done away with, we reduced it by maybe three or four—I have forgotten, but it was about one-third or one-fourth of the amount that they asked in the rate war. That put it down, I say, to fifty, sixty, or seventy thou-sand dollars—somewhere along there, whatever it was—and that, added to what they claimed the washery was worth and they could sell it for—I had Mr. Boland show me a proposition to buy for $90,000—so my judgment was not as good as some coal man's judgment who said he would give them $90,000, and I had every reason to believe perhaps it was so, and therefore we added it together and it made $161,000, and that is the only price I ever had, the only price I was ever authorized to offer the land for to the Lackawanna road, and I offered it at that price.

Mr. FLOYD. I understood you to say, since I have been questioning you here, that the first price offered was $100,000.

Mr. WATSON. That is right.

Mr. FLOYD. And that you were to have $5,000 of that in case the deal was made?

Mr. FLOYD. Did you not think you could sell it to the Lackawanna road for $100,000 easier than you could for $160,000?

Mr. WATSON. That did not dispose of the rate business. There was nothing in the rates then. The rates was another matter.

Mr. FLOYD. I thought you stated it was to settle all these cases.

Mr. FLOYD. The Peale case?

Mr. WATSON. Not for $100,000.

Mr. FLOYD. The Peale case and the colliery were to be turned over to them for $100,000; the washery and the coal dump and their leases; and then, when I examined that, I found a quarter interest, or such a matter, whatever it was, claimed by the Lackawanna. This coal dump, if you will pardon me, was made at three different times and by three independent operations. I did not know that when I was first negotiating for this, but it seems that Mr. Felts dumped some of it by an earlier mining. Then came the Lackawanna, and they dumped some of it; then came some one else, and they dumped some of it. During that time Mr. Felts, who was the former owner of the fee—something had happened to him in a financial way, and he was obliged to take a nephew, a Mr. Hoysradt, or somebody, in there, and there was another dispute about that, Mr. Hoysradt's interest, Mr. Felt's interest, and the Lackawanna failroad's interest, and then they claimed that did not amount to anything. I did not know whether it did or not.

Mr. FLOYD. When who got through talking about it?

Mr. Watson. Boland and ourselves; we were discussing that for a long time.

Mr. FLOYD. When who got through talking about it?

Mr. Watson. Boland and ourselves; we long time.

Mr. FLOYD. I thought you said the Bolands claimed it did not amount to anything?

Mr. Warson. Boland and ourselves; we were discussing that for a long time.

Mr. FLOYD. I thought you said the Bolands claimed it did not amount to anything?

Mr. Warson. They did.

Mr. FLOYD. Who told you it did amount to something? Where did you get the information?

Mr. Warson. Because I knew it, as a matter of fact, living in the community, that Mr. Felts owned that. I asked Mr. Felts's executor about that; I recall mentioning the fact to him, and asking him what the business was down there, and he could not tell me definitely what it was. Then I knew from the Lackawanna people. I remember a law-suit about it, recalled it readily, that there was a disputed claim there. I talked with Mr. Phillips a good many times, four or five times, perhaps, before I went down to New York. It was during that period of, say, approximately two or three weeks, that I was talking with Mr. Phillips, trying to get an arrangement. Mr. Phillips had an estimate made of the pile, and told me it was only worth $14,000. I would naturally sit up and take notice, when I was offering it for $100,000, and he said it was worth $14,000.

Mr. FLOYD. That is what I can not understand, Mr. Watson, when you had a contract to sell the property and settle this difficulty between these parties at $100,000, that when you ascertained that various complications had arisen, and somebody else owned one-third interest, you raised the price instead of lowering it.

Mr. Warson. When we had the contact for $100,000, I say there was no rate discussed. There was no interstate-commerce business discussed all the papers.

Mr. FLOYD. After this rate matter was added to it and you were trying to sell the property for $161,000, did you have any change in your contract about your $5,000 fee?

Mr. Warson. No; there was no interstate-commerce business discussed all the papers.

Mr. FLOYD. After this rate matter was added to it and you were trying to sell the property for $161,000, did you have any contact mouth the property in the property of the fact had you have an or Will Boland.

Mr. Floyd. Which one?

Mr. Watson. I could not tell you. The chances are that all of the rate business was talked by Will Boland, because I do not ever recall talking rates with Christy Boland, because he did not know them.

Mr. Floyd. Do you have any recollection about that? Is it possible that an item of $60,000, your contract changed to your disadvantage.

Mr. Watson. No: it was not to my disadvantage; I had the same fee.

Mr. Floyd. Would it be to your advantage, If your fee depended upon the sale of the property, to raise it from $100,000 to $161,000? Did not that lessen your chances to float the property and get your $5,000?

Mr. Watson. This Marlan Coal Co., when we got down to the going to the company, and the Lackawanna Co., was simply used as a vehicle to carry all the burdens of the Bolands in there, and get them all settled at one time. I knew when I went over to the Lackawanna that the coal was not worth over $15,000 or $16,000; I knew that. I did not know it when I began. I supposed it was worth $100,000. But the rate claim was the bogey; that was the big thing.

Mr. Floyd. Then, if you knew when you made the proposition to the railroad company that the Marian Coal Co.'s property was not worth over $15,000 or $16,000—

Mr. Watson. I knew that. Do you wonder I would have the nerve to ask that?

Mr. Floyd. Then I will ask you again why it was that instead of lowering the price at which you offered it to the coal company you raised it to $160,000?

Mr. Watson. I did not raise it at all; get this in your mind. I never fixed a price on that property at all. The price was fixed by Mr. W. P. Boland, and agreed to by his brother no doubt, $161,000; and the reason it was raised was because they had people to take care of. What would it be worth to secure a culm pile with Mr. Peale with some interest in it and not going along with you, and the Lackawanna claiming one-fourth interest in the pile? So something had to be done in eliminating all those. When I say thirteen or fourteen thousaid dollars I take out those interests.

Mr. Floyd. Will you tell me when and where W. P. Boland directed you or instructed you to raise that price to $161,000?

Mr. Watson. I did not raise it.

Mr. Floyd. Instructed you to raise it?

Mr. Watson. He did not instruct me to raise it; I did not raise it. He made that price to me.

Mr. Floyd. When and where did he make the price?

Mr. Watson. My recollection is it was in my office. I never did any business with Mr. Boland outside of this, except I might speak to him on the street corner or something.

Mr. Floyd. Who was present?

Mr. Floyd. Who was present?

Mr. Watson. Nobody but Boland and myself.

Mr. Floyd. Who was present?

Mr. Watson. Nobody but Boland and myself.

Mr. Floyd. Have you the papers?

Mr. Watson. No. I dim not the papers?

Mr. Watson. No. I diverse everything back to Mr. Boland that I had not man and that I had not man and that I had not man and that I

has now

has now.

Mr. FLOYD. Have you the papers?

Mr. WATSON. No; I gave everything back to Mr. Boland that I had, every memorandum and everything else, excepting these letters; and I did not know I had those until I went digging around for them and I found those books, and those letters were in the books, and that telegram—the letters and the telegram; and I brought all that I had. Mr. FLOYD. Did anybody come to Washington with you?

Mr. WATSON. No.

Mr. FLOYD. At the time you wired Judge Archbald?

Mr. WATSON. No; I came from Stroudsburg directly to Washington. Mr. FLOYD. You were well acquainted with Judge Archbald, were you not?

Mr. Warson. Oh, yes; I have known Judge Archbald, I think, as early as 1880. I went to Scranton 34 years ago, and shortly after going there I knew Judge Archbald.

Mr. FLOYD. Why was it you did not wire Judge Archbald, as a matter of courtesy to you, to send you copies of briefs in this case?

Mr. Warson. I did not know what I wanted until I looked at the record. I did not know who where the records, and I did not know that they had any, really, to be honest; I did not know what they had. When I had talked about this Commerce Court, I did not know what they were keeping. They were just beginning. I did not know whether they had done any business before that.

Mr. FLOYD. Did you not state the case had been decided, and that on account of the importance of the decision you came down here to get the papers, or get knowledge of the papers, in this other case reference to?

Aff. FLOYD. Did you not state the case had been declored and count of the importance of the decision you came down here to get the papers, or get knowledge of the papers, in this other case referred to?

Mr. Warson. Maybe I can impress on your mind what I did say, and what I intended to say.

Mr. FLOYD. All right.

Mr. Warson. That is, that I had learned, through some indirect source, or through the newspapers, that the Harry Meeker case—as we called it; I knew the Meekers—had been decided by the Interstate Commerce Commission favorably to Meeker. I had heard that, and it had been talked about; I will not say how long, whether it was a week or a month, but I should judge a month or two; that I had heard it, and I had never examined it, and I did not know that I had heard it, and I had never examined it, and I did not know that an attorney in our town at that time was the representative of one of the companies, or I would have gone to him. I did not know that I had been shoult be would come to my office. He did tell me a number of times about the Meeker case, how it had been disposed of, and that it had been appealed by the company. I did not know whether it was in the Circuit Court of Appeals or in the United States Commerce Court, as I recall it. They had not been doing very much business; at least, I had heard nothing of them, and whether they had met and decided cases or not I did not know.

I talked to perhaps a half a dozen people—I do not recall who, but lawyers who ought to have known about those things; they were practicing in that kind of business—and I got no information. It was my idea of coming down here. I may have spoken to Mr. Martin about it—I would be very apt to; he was right in the building where I was—and asked him how I got into that court. I asked some one surely, and they told me that the appeal was taken to the United States Commerce Court. I knew there must be some record, and I knew they must get in there in some way. Therefore I came down to see if I could get the record, the docket e

Mr. FLOYD. As a matter of fact, did you not ask him to do it?
Mr. WATSON. I did not, because I did not have to. I asked the young man if he could get me the books. He said he could, and the young man went in and got them. I do not know who he was.

Mr. FLOYD. Did you not state that when you went into the Commerce Court room there was some young man in there with Judge Archbald, and you had a conversation, were talking, and Judge Archbald introduced some other person to you, and that this person Judge Archbald introduced to you went and got the books? Did you not state that?

state that?

Mr. Warson. If I can be understood, the way I recall now was that when I went to that building—

Mr. FLOYD. I am asking you did you not state that?

Mr. Warson. Not as you put it, no: because that is not true. I do not think I saw the young man until after I had seen Judge Arch-

Mr. Prote. Y am asking you did you not state that?

Mr. Warson. Not as you put it, no: because that is not true. I do not think I saw the young man until after I had seen Judge Archbald.

Mr. Floyd. That is the way I put it.

Mr. Warson. Judge Archbald was standing there—I remember the fact now; I met Judge Archbald, and we went in the building together. Maybe I asked him where I could see him—I imagine I did, now send a telegram asking him if he would meet me at a place I knew. I did not know where the court met, and I think he met me at some place, but I can not tell you where now.

Mr. Floyd. Then you sent two telegrams, did you?

Mr. Warson. That was sent, perhaps, from Philadelphia, on my way down here; I think so.

Mr. Floyd. Then you ac copy of that?

Mr. Warson. No, sir; I do not keep copies of telegrams.

Mr. Floyd. Have you a copy of that?

Mr. Warson. Vou do not keep copies of telegrams.

Mr. Floyd. Then, at Philadelphia, or somewhere along the line, you sent. Bloyd. Then, at Philadelphia, or somewhere along the line, you sent. Bloyd. Then, at Philadelphia, or somewhere along the line, you sent. Bloyd. Then, at Philadelphia, or somewhere along the line, you sent. Bloyd. Then, at Philadelphia, or somewhere along the line, you sent. Bloyd. Then, at Philadelphia, or somewhere along the line, you sent. Bloyd. Then, at Philadelphia, or somewhere along the line, you sent. Bloyd. Warson. I do not knew where; I asked him to, anyhow.

Mr. Floyd. Warson. I do not knew where; I asked him to, early wow. Mr. Floyd. Warson. I do not knew where; I asked him to, early wow. Warson. I do not knew where; I asked him to, early wow. Warson. I do not knew were to the details of that. I remember now that I came to Washington, and the hour of the day I can not give you, because I got mixed up on a train in Philadelphia and did not get down quite as early as I ought to have got here. I left the station after inquiring of somebody what car to take to get to the Hotel Raleigh, and I went to the Hotel Raleigh and I checked my s

Mr. Watson. Because it gets pretty close to the fact, as I understand it, by innuendo, that I was down for some improper purpose to this judge.

The Chairman. Did anybody send you down here to bribe Judge Knapp or anybody else?

Mr. Watson. I have heard it around here some. There has been some hinting I want to resent.

The Chairman. I would like to know who has hinted at it.

Mr. Watson. Perhaps my skin may be a little thin on that subject. I think I have heard it.

The Chairman. I had heard nothing of the sort, and I wanted to get what that remark, interjected at that point, meant.

Mr. Watson. Well, I read in the evidence that Christy Boland, or some one, said in this trial that I told him I had two judges besides Judge Archbald that I could rely on in the United States Commerce Court to decide cases my way; it is in your record; something like that. That may be putting it a little stronger than it really appears; and I never met those men.

The Chairman. You said that Boland said that you told him that? Mr. Watson. Yes.

The Chairman. And that you read that in the record?

Mr. Watson. I read it in the record; something like that. The Chairman. Are you not mistaken about it?

Mr. Watson. Or in a newspaper or something. I do not know where I read it.

The Chairman. You read that statement?

Mr. Watson. Or in a newspaper or something. I do not know where I read it.

The Chairman. You read that statement?

Mr. Watson. Yes, sir; that I had two judges—

Mr. Webb. I do not think he attributed that much influence to you.

The Chairman. I never heard that much influence attributed to you.

Mr. Watson. Let us change it and put that I said I had. That is the way they always put it.

Mr. Webb. He said that you said that you had two judges you could influence?

influence?
Mr. Warson. He must have said that I said that the judge said to

Mr. Watson, he must have said that I said that the judge could influence two other judges?

Mr. Watson. Then I beg the committee's pardon. I supposed I was the guilty one, that I was doing it myself. I have not very much influence, I know.

Mr. Webb. He did not say that, either.

Mr. Noraris. Mr. Watson, the object of your coming down to Washington to get the papers, or to see the record in the Meeker case, was to enable you to prepare yourself to meet the railroad officials in that conference that was going to take place in Scranton, was it not?

Mr. Watsox. Yes, sir; I wanted to know something about how they did those things, that is all, and I did not know it.

Mr. Norris. Those people you were going to meet in Scranton were simply officials of the railroad; you were not going to argue this case in court, were you?

Mr. Watsox. No; but we were going to talk about rates.

Mr. Norris. And you wanted to know something about rates so you would be able to cope with them in that negotiation, did you not?

Mr. Watsox. Yes.

Mr. Watson, Yes.
Mr. Norms. That was the object of your coming to Washington?
Mr. Watson, Yes.
Mr. Norms. You got what you call "books" when you came down

Mr. Warson. Yes.

Mr. Norris. You got what you call "books" when you came down hore?

Mr. Warson. That is all.

Mr. Norris. These two [indicating]?

Mr. Warson. I did get another one.

Mr. Norris. What other one?

Mr. Warson. Something like that; some amendment to those.

Mr. Norris. This is entitled "United States Commerce Court, case No. 40. Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., petitioner, v. The United States, respondent. Brief for Henry E. Meeker, surviving partner of the firm of Meeker & Co." That is one of the books, is it?

Mr. Warson. Yes.

Mr. Norris. The other one is in the same case, case No. 49. United States Commerce Court, entitled the same way, October session, 1911, brief for petitioners. That, I take it, is the railroad company's brief?

Mr. Warson. Yes.

Mr. Norris. These are the two books that you have been speaking about, these briefs?

Mr. Warson. Yes, sir.

Mr. Norris. What was the other book?

Mr. Warson. Something like that. It was either an amendment or else that is an amendment of the other one.

Mr. Norris. It was, perhaps, a reply brief, or something like that?

Mr. Warson. No. The book you have in your hand, I think, is the Valley book, is it not? That is the one that the railroad company filed?

Mr. Norris. Yes.

Mr. Norris. Yes.
Mr. Watson. My recollection is that perhaps this book contains more than the other one.
Mr. Norris. It does.
Mr. Watson. No; but I mean the other one I got. I got two books of the Valley Railroad.
Mr. Norris. You had two of their briefs instead of one?
Mr. Watson. Yes; but one was not as full as the other, or there was something there.
Mr. Norris. You did not get anything except briefs?
Mr. Watson. I looked at the record—at the docket, or something they had there.
Mr. Norris. I believe you testified here that that was one of your objects in coming down?
Mr. Watson. Yes; I wanted to see what sort of a record they had there.

there.

Mr. Norris. You wanted to see the docket entries?

Mr. Watson. It would hardly be that. The record would be all they there. r. Norris. If you did not mean what you said, tell us what you

Mr. Warson. It you did not mean what you said, tell us what you do mean.

Mr. Warson. I wanted to get the whole case.

Mr. Norris. The docket entries would be part?

Mr. Warson. Yes; and this would be part [indicating book].

Mr. Norris. Now, tell the committee, will you, what good you expected, what benefit you expected, in negotiating with these railroad officials would be any knowledge you might have of what was on the docket, what were the docket entries in another case entirely independent of the one you were trying to settle?

Mr. Warson. I can tell you in one moment what I had in my mind when I came here. My experience with railroad companies is that they deny everything in sight; they will not agree to anything until you bring them up to where they can see. Their vision is affected on anything that concerns them. You have to bring them forcibly up to it. I understood from the newspapers, or from Mr. Boland also, and from others I had talked with, that this Meeker case was tried greatly to the advantage of Mr. Meeker: that they had reduced the rates of the railroad company; and that Mr. Meeker was likely to recover a couple of hundred thousand dollars by the reduction of the rates. Now, you say it was on an entirely different case. A case where a railroad company is shipping coal from about the same point, and the same sizes, and to the same destination, is pretty nearly the same case.

Mr. Norris. It was not shipping coal from the same point, was it?

Mr. Warson. Yes; they were within almost a stone's throw of the same point. The Lackawanna Valley opens into the Wyoming Valley, and they are not 15 miles apart.

Mr. Norris. As a matter of fact, what information did you get that was of any benefit to you in those negotiations?

Mr. Norris. Will you point out to me the place in either one of three grades.

Mr. Norris. Will you point out to me the place in either one of three grades.

Mr. Norris. I would be very glad to have you show me that. [Handing the witness briefs]

Mr. Norris. Will you point out one to prove these briefs where you got that information?

Mr. Wayson. I think I can show you where it was reduced two or three grades.

Mr. Norris. I would be very glad to have you show me that. [Handing the witness briefs.]

Mr. Wayson. I think I can. I am not familiar with the book now. It has been out of my hands a long time.

Mr. Norris. You went over it carefully, did you not?

Mr. Wayson. Yes; but I do not hug things so long as that.

Mr. Norris. Your memory was good at that time?

Mr. Wayson. It was not so good at that time?

Mr. Wayson. It was not so good at that time, either. My recollection is that it was a comparison of rates we were making here, and the things I got I do not seem to put my hand on.

Mr. Norris. The information you are looking for is where they reduced the rates, so that you could show in this other case how they reduced the rates in the Meeker case? [After a pause.] Mr. Watson, I do not want to delay the committee too long.

Mr. Wayson. You are asking me to look for something in this book. I have found where this rate is discussed here.

Mr. Norris. Now, Mr. Watson, just let me call your attention to the fact that those are briefs.

Mr. Wayson. I understand that. They were appeals.

Mr. Wayson. I understand that. They were appeals.

Mr. Warson. I understand that. They were appeals.
Mr. Norms. You can not find in those briefs any action, of course, that the courts took in that case?
Mr. Warson. But I can find what the attorneys said they took. I did not have the decree.

Mr. Norris. You were getting to it, and you said you did argue at great length what they had done in the Meeker case?

Mr. Watson. I did; and perhaps I have it in the other book.

Mr. Norris. Is it not true that the Meeker case was not decided, and that they had not done anything, and that it was never decided on its marits?

Mr. Norris. Is it not true that the most and that they had not done anything, and that it was never decided on its merits?

Mr. Watson. They reduced several sizes.

Mr. Norris. At this time the Commerce Court had not taken any action in the Meeker case; and how could you use anything in the Meeker case with these railroad officials to show what action the court had taken in that case?

Mr. Watson. I simply did it by calling their attention to certain reductions I knew of, and I got the information from what they did.

Mr. Norris. But there could not be any information in the briefs filed by attorneys before the case was disposed of?

Mr. Watson. This case was before the United States Commerce Court, and the United States Commerce Court, and the United States Commerce Court, and the United States Commerce Commission had gotten through with it, as I understood it.

Mr. Norris. Yes; the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. Watson. Yes; and it was their finding that I was talking about and not the court's.

Mr. Norris. Did you expect to use that?

Mr. Watson. Yes; because it gave me information as to what they might expect.

Mr. Norris. No: that could not possibly be, because it was the Commission.

might expect.

Mr. Norris. No; that could not possibly be, because it was the Commerce Court that was going to pass upon it. Why did you go to the Commerce Court to get what the Interstate Commerce Commission had

Mr. Norkis. No; that could not possibly be, because it was the Commerce Court to get what the Interstate Commerce Commission had done?

Mr. Watson. Because I went to those books to get what the Interstate Commerce Commission did.

Mr. Norkis. They do not show it. They show the claims made by the respective attorneys. Do you want this committee to believe that a lawyer of many years' experience and practice would go to the Commerce Court and get the briefs of the attorneys in order to find out what the Interstate Commerce Commission had done, when, right in the same city, he could go over to the Interstate Commerce Commission and get their decision directly?

Mr. Watson. Ves; but I did not know it.

Mr. Norkis. You did not know it?

Mr. Norkis. You did not. I am frank to say that I never knew anything about the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. Norkis. You have just said that it was the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission that you were looking for.

Mr. Watson. It was; I wanted the information.

Mr. Norkis. Then you did know there was such a thing?

Mr. Watson. Did I know it? I have known it ever since they have been in existence. But to go before them, to get them to have anything to do with this, or to study their decisions, I never did in my life, because I never was interested.

Mr. Norkis. You wanted to arm yourself, for this argument with these railroad officials, with the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Mecker case?

Mr. Watson. That is just what I wanted.

Mr. Norkis. And you were right here in Washington where the Interstate Commerce Commission sits?

Mr. Watson. I did not know. I perhaps did not know how; I will admit that.

Mr. Norkis. And did not know. I perhaps did not know how; I will admit that.

Mr. Norkis. And satisfied yourself by taking the briefs of the attorneys?

Mr. Watson. Yes; and something else; I got something else.

Mr. WATSON. Yes.
Mr. NORRIS. And satisfied yourself by taking the briefs of the attorneys?
Mr. WATSON. Yes; and something else; I got something else.
Mr. NORRIS. The other one was a brief?
Mr. WATSON. I think it was a brief of some kind.
Mr. NORRIS. You got matter for the argument that you expected to be of benefit to you up in Scranton, and that is the reason you wired Judge Archbald and came clear down here to Washington, was it?
Mr. WATSON. To a man who knew nothing about the practice before the Interstate Commerce Commission any information I could get would be very agreeable to me.
Mr. NORRIS. You did not get any information at all?
Mr. WATSON. I got information—
Mr. NORRIS. As a matter of fact—
Mr. WATSON. I got information enough so that they admitted what I said was true.
Mr. NORRIS. The record of the Interstate Commerce Commission you did not get?
Mr. WATSON. That is true, unless that other book was the record of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I do not know whether it was or not.
Mr. NORRIS. It is not likely you would get that in the Commerce Court?
Mr. WATSON. No; I do not know. I do not know any other place only there. I do not know whet I had. Somehody ways it to me.

Court?

Mr. Watson. No; I do not know. I do not know any other place only there. I do not know what I had. Somebody gave it to me.

Mr. Norris. You said in the beginning of your testimony, that you went to see Judge Archbald about the practice in the Commerce Court?

Mr. Watson. That is, after you had been employed by the Bolands?

Mr. Norris. You were employed, then, in a case that was before the Interstate Commerce Commission that you thought might eventually get to the Commerce Court?

Mr. Watson. No, sir; it was not before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. Watson. No, sir; it was not before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. Norris. Where was it?

Mr. Watson. Oh, I guess it was; yes.

Mr. Norris. Did I state it correctly?

Mr. Watson. Yes; that is right.

Mr. Norris. And you wanted to know the procedure in the Commerce Court so that you would know what to do in case your case did reach that court?

Mr. Watson. Yes.

Mr. Norris. And you went to see Judge Archbald to get that information?

Mr. Watson. I spoke to him about it; yes, sir.
Mr. Norris. You testified that at that time you had not even read the law providing for the Commerce Court?
Mr. Watson. I had not.
Mr. Norris. As a lawyer, does it not appear to you that when you finally got a case that might possibly reach this court, the way to find out what the court was would be to read the law instead of going to the judge who presided and asking what the law was when he would have to pass on the case when you got up to it?

Mr. Watson. I did not ask him what the law was. That was not it. It was a matter of practice. I have practiced long enough to know that the courts fix their own rules of practice. That is what I was talking to him about.

Mr. Norris. You had not read the law?

Mr. Watson. I had not.

Mr. Norris. Does it not appeal to you as a lawyer of a great many years' standing that before it is necessary for you to find out what the practice is you ought at least to read the law?

Mr. Watson. I did; that day.

Mr. Norris. You did that afterwards?

Mr. Watson. Yes; I did it that day. I got a little pamphlet, or something that had the act printed in it, and I read it.

Mr. Norris. Now, Mr. Watson, will you tell the committee that, employed as an attorney in a case involving quite a large sum of money, employed by the Bolands in a case pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, in order to equip yourself for an argument with the railroad officials you knew was coming on soon, it being necessary for you to find out something about what the Interstate Commerce Commission did, you sent this telegram and then followed it up and then came down to see Judge Archbald without going to the Interstate Commerce Commission or making any attempt to get the record or the decision or the opinion in that case?

Mr. Watson. It may seem so to you, but, so far as I recall now, it did not appeal to me.

Mr. Norris. Does it seem to you that a man who will accept a fee, or who expects to get paid for his services as an attorney, and who pursues that course is entitled to any fee for his services?

Mr. Watson. I do not know why I would not be entitled to it if I brought about a settlement, no matter what happened, or how I got the information. But I want to answer the question. You asked a question. I had been led to believe, through Mr. W. P. Boland, from the be to settle this rate case if they could get some excuse for paying the money.

Mr. Norris. You are not answering my question, Mr. Watson.

Mr. Watson. And that was the reason why, perhaps, nothing was looked up until we got advantageously close to it. Then I did want to know more about it.

Mr. Norris. You were seeking information as to what the Interstate Commerce Commission had done in the Meeker case?

Mr. Watson. I was.

Mr. Norris. Can you explain to this committee, when you were seeking this information, why you did not go where you must have known the information existed?

Mr. Watson. I thought the information existed in this court.

Mr. Norris. Where?

Mr. Watson. I thought I could find it in the United States Commerce Court.

Mr. Norris. Did you not know that you would not find it?

Mr. Norris. Did you not know that you would not find it?
Mr. Watson. I did not.
Mr. Norris. You did not know when you got those briefs you had not found it?

Mr. Watson. I did: I supposed I did. I had some other paper that gave me the information I wanted.

Mr. Norris. You have already testified that that other paper was a

Mr. Watson. I did; I supposed I did. I had some other paper that gave me the information I wanted.

Mr. Norris, You have already testified that that other paper was a brief.

Mr. Watson. It was the same kind; yes.
Mr. Norris, So that it would be along the same line of these you have testified to and identified?

Mr. Watson. Perhaps so.
Mr. Norris. Do you know now what the Interstate Commerce Commission did in the Meeker case?
Mr. Watson. I know that at that time they had reduced the rate on two or three sizes of the coal.

Mr. Norris. Did you ever read the opinion in the Meeker case?
Mr. Watson. I have not; because it was handed down since my coming—since I have been out of this case.
Mr. Norris. I am speaking of the decision of the Meeker case before the Interstate Commerce Commission. That had been passed on prior to this date, because the case had been appealed by the railroad company, and was pending in the Commerce Court.
Mr. Watson. I did, at the time, know it was a reduction on the smaller sizes of the coal.
Mr. Norris. I asked you, have you ever read the opinion?
Mr. Watson, No; I do not think so.
Mr. Norris. The opinion had been written and was published and was a public document.
Mr. Watson, Yes; I suppose so.
Mr. Norris. Prior to the time you were arming yourself for this controversy with the railroad officials?
Mr. Watson, I presume it was.
Mr. Norris. And you were seeking information in regard to that very case and what they did, and never looked it up to see?
Mr. Watson, I was seeking information—
Mr. Norris. And you were seeking information and I thought I had it.
Mr. Norris. You satisfied yourself by getting some briefs filed by attorneys in the case;
Mr. Norris. You satisfied yourself by getting some briefs filed by attorneys in the case;
Mr. Norris. You was feeking information and I thought I had it.
Mr. Norris. You knew that how what I did have it, or there was some expression.
Mr. Watson, I do not know but what I did have it, or there was some expression.
Mr. Watson. I those work as a matter

Mr. Norris. You knew that the opinion would not be m the brief—there might be a reference to it—and you knew that to get that opinion all you had to do was to go to the Interstate Commerce Commission, or to send a telegram from Scranton to the clerk of the Interstate Commerce Commission and got that opinion by mail quicker than you got it this way, could you not?

Mr. Warson. I presume I could, if I had known that. I did not know; that is ali.

Mr. Webb. Let me ask you a question again. You carried these important briefs back that you came all the way down here, 250 or 300 miles, for. Did you show them to Mr. Truesdale, and say, "Here is your railroad that has a case pending in the Commerce Court."? Did you say, "Mr. Truesdale, here are the briefs. You have a case pending down there in court, and I have been down to Washington, and I saw Judge Archbald yesterday, and I know something about these rates now, and you had better just stand and deliver"?

Mr. Warson. No, sir; I never spoke to Mr. Truesdale in that way. Mr. Warson. No, sir. I showed him one I had, in which I claimed certain rates. I showed him a paper I had with these printed on it, what we claimed.

Mr. Webb. Did you know that this suit was one pending in the Commerce Court when you came down here?

Mr. Warson. I did not.

Mr. Webb. Tou did not know it was then pending?

Mr. Warson. No, sir.

Mr. Webb. Webb. No, sir.

Mr. Webb. No, sir.

Mr. Webb. No, sir.

Mr. Webb. Webb. No, sir.

Mr. Webb. No, sir.

Mr. Webb. Webb. Webb. No went to the judge about this rate case, I

Mr. Webb. And that it was dismissed only here in April on motion of counsel for the railroad?

Mr. Watson. No, sir.

Mr. Webb. When you went to the judge about this rate case, I ask you if he did not tell you that this rate action was a very good one to settle out of court; Boland's case?

Mr. Watson. No, sir.

Mr. Webb. That was not ever said by the court.

Mr. Watson. No. I heard it was said to Boland, but it never was to me; or else I have read it in the papers that it was said to Boland.

Mr. Webb. Has there been any feeling between you and Judge Archbald in the last 10 years?

Mr. Watson. I do not know; I would not want to say that; no.

Mr. Webb. You have been very close friends, then, have you?

Mr. Watson. Well, I would not say that we had.

Mr. Webb. You impressed me that, for some reason, you did not practice before Judge Archbald's court.

Mr. Watson. I do not think I ought to be compelled to state all my personal reasons for not being there. If the committee asks for it, I will tell them why.

The Chairman. Unless it has some bearing upon this matter.

Mr. Watson. Absolutely nothing. It was simply a matter of the appointment of Judge Archbald under certain conditions, when he was appointed judge; and after I knew he was going to be appointed judge, I helped him; and maybe I ought not to have done it, because there are certain reasons—

Mr. Webb. That is not the reason you have not practiced in his court, is it?

Mr. Watson. I did not go over there the next day to help him open court, and I did not go back for some little time; but I had no feeling about it.

Mr. Webb. You have not had any?

about it.

Mr. Webb. You have not had any?

Mr. Watson. No; I like Judge Archbald very much.

Mr. Watson. No; I like Judge Archbald very much.

Mr. Webb. As a matter of fact, you hold a position now to which you were recommended by the judge, do you not?

Mr. Watson. If he recommended me, I want to thank him now;
I did not know that he did.

Mr. Webb. Do you hold the position now?

Mr. Watson. I do.

Mr. Webb. What is it?

Mr. Watson. It is solicitor for the county of Lackawanna.

Mr. Webb. And you did not know that the judge, if he ever did recommend you, had done it?

Mr. Watson. No. I wish to thank him, if he did it, because I did not know it. I supposed that I got it from an entirely different source.

Mr. Webb. When I examined you awhile ago I did not know that you had wired the judge a second message to meet you somewhere in Washington. Did you wire him on your way down here to meet you at the Raleigh Hotel?

Mr. Warsax. I do not know. I think very likely I did, if he met

Mr. WATSSN. I do not know. I think very likely I did, it he accome there.

Mr. Webb. Do you remember now? Awhile ago you remembered the very side of the street you went up on, and every little detail.

Mr. WATSON. I did not remember the side of the street I went up on, but I met him at the Raleigh Hotel, and we walked up to this build-

Mr. Webb. Was it raining?
Mr. Watson. Maybe not, when I got in here; but it had been raining, and it did rain afterwards.
Mr. Webb. It rained before and after?
Mr. Webb. It rained before and after?
Mr. Watson. Maybe not; just at that moment it was not raining.
Mr. Webb. You remember you went into this building from the H Street side?

Mr. Webb. To the hold you went into this building from the H Street side?

Mr. Warson. Yes; I did. I know how we got into the building, because one winter I lived on the corner opposite that, a number of years ago, and I noticed the building and its location when we went in, and I noticed the Shoreham Hotel from where we went in.

Mr. Webb. I thought you were an entire stranger here?

Mr. Warson. I have been down here a couple of times.

Mr. Webb. Can you tell us where you wired the judge to meet you; that is, at what point did you wire the judge to meet you?

Mr. Warson. From what point did I send the telegram?

Mr. Webb. No; you sent that telegram from somewhere on the way. But where did you tell the judge to meet you here in Washington?

Mr. Warson. That is a blank to me. But if he met me at the Raleigh Hotel, that is probably where it was.

Mr. Webb. That is the only reason you have? I thought you met him on the street?

Mr. Warson. It was in front of the hotel, I imagine. That is what I think; I think, now, he was standing in front of the hotel.

Mr. Webb. You just happened to go up and meet him ther?

Mr. Warson. No; it was the place I expected to meet him; I have no doubt of that.

Mr. Webb. Do you know what street the Raleigh Hotel is on?

Mr. WATSON. Yes; Twelfth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue. Mr. WEBB. That is right; and you can not tell us now, although you now where the Raleigh Hotel is, what point you wired the judge to know where the Raleigh Hotel is, what point you wired the judge to meet you?

Mr. Watson, I do not; but from the fact that I checked my satchel in the Raleigh Hotel—I remember that very well—I suppose that I asked him if he would meet me at the Raleigh Hotel. I presume I did. Mr. Webb. You presume you did?

Mr. Webb. You presume you did?

Mr. Watson, Yes.

Mr. Webb. Can you not swear that you did or did not? You told us a while ago about going to the Commerce Court and meeting one fellow and another, and meeting the judge, and what was said. Can you not tell us what was in your telegram you sent to the judge?

Mr. Watson, No; I can not. If I were going to tell you my best recollection, I would say, "Meet me at the Raleigh Hotel," at a certain time, and that time I knew when it was, when I would arrive here. I think that is just what I did say.

Mr. Webb. Is not that a very peculiar telegram from a man who is coming down to Washington seeking information about a case about records to wire a United States Commerce Court judge to meet him at a certain point in this city? Do you think you sent the judge any such telegram as that?

at a certain point in this city? Do you think you sent the judge any such telegram as that?

Mr. Watson. I do not know, but I imagine that is what I sent, something like that. I think I did. I think I knew, from some information that I had gotten, that the courts were closed on Saturday afternoon, and I thought I knew the judge well enough to ask him to meet me at a certain place. I did not know I was going to the Commerce Court when I met him. I had no idea where I was going. I expected to go somewhere where I could get this information, and I heard that the appeals were in the United States Commerce Court. That is all I knew.

Mr. Webb. You do not even know the time of day when you came here?

Mr. Webb. You do not even know the time of day when you came here?

Mr. Watson. It was later than I expected to get here, on account of something the matter with the train.

Mr. Webb. Do you remember about the time it was?

Mr. Watson. I would say neon—about 12 o'clock; something like that. It may have been an hour earlier.

Mr. Webb. When did you leave him?

Mr. Webb. Yhen did you leave him?

Mr. Watson. I went away from here at 6; I do not know that I left him at 6.

Mr. Webb. You were with him from 12 to 6 o'clock?

Mr. Watson. I think I was, nearly all the time. We sat down on a bench in the hotel, or somewhere, and talked.

Mr. Webb. You were with him from 12 to 6 o'clock?

Mr. Watson. Perhaps so; maybe it was the Pennsylvania Station; I do not know. I know that I sat down somewhere with him and talked, not in the court bullding.

Mr. Webb. When you say you were employed to assist in this case of the Marian Coal Co. against the railroad company in the Commerce Court, did you know Mr. Reynolds was their counsel then?

Mr. Watson. Yes; that was talked.

Mr. Webb. Why did you not go to Reynolds to get his opinion about these things, the practice that you talked about?

Mr. Watson. Mr. Reynolds would not settle with the Lackawanna—so Christy Boland told me after—that he would not settle with the Lackawanna, and they wanted some one who would settle this case. What the reason was I do not know. I told them I would not take hold of the case and try it out, or go into the Commerce Court, unless Mr. Reynolds agreed to it, and they said: "You settle this with the Marian washery case."

Mr. Watson. No; this case was put in. As I say, they used the Marian washery case?

Mr. Watson. No; this case was put in. As I say, they used the Marian washery case to give the Lackawanna an opportunity, or a

Mr. Webb. That was all the authority you had to settle the Marian washery case?

Mr. Watson. No; this case was put in. As I say, they used the Marian washery case to give the Lackawanna an opportunity, or a chance to buy them out without paying rates.

Mr. Webb. Were you ever employed by the Bolands before in any lawsuit in your life?

Mr. Watson. Never. I have known Christy Boland a great many years. He was treasurer of the city of Scranton when I was an advisor of the mayor at that time, and I learned to know him very well; and then he ran for treasurer—county treasurer—at a time when some of us got licked, and I was among them, and so wus Mr. Boland. We were together more or less then, although we were on opposite tickets.

Mr. Webb. That is not necessary—

Mr. Watson. And I knew him very well.

Mr. Webb. You were never employed by him before?

Mr. Watson. No; unless it was in some minor matter, to see some-body.

Mr. Watson. No; unless it was in some minor matter, to see somebody.

Mr. Webb. Can you tell the committee why you did not consult Reynolds about this important litigation?

Mr. Watson. Because I was advised not to, and I did not know what I was going to do, and what I had. The washery case had nothing to do with Reynolds, and this was hooked on afterwards.

Mr. Webb. Did you know that Reynolds would not recognize you in the case at all?

Mr. Watson. Did I know?

Mr. Webb. Yes.

Mr. Watson. I do not know what Mr. Reynolds would do, whether he would recognize me or not. He has often recognized me when he wanted something; I know that.

Mr. Webb. Had you not heard—

Mr. Watson. I do not dodge anywhere for any Reynolds I ever knew that was ever born under the sun.

Mr. Webb. You did know that Mr. Reynolds was more of a rate expert lawyer than you were?

Mr. Watson. I know that Mr. Reynolds has been fiddling around this Commerce Commission for some time; that is, I heard that within the last year. I never knew it before; I did not know what his business was.

Mr. Webb. He could have told you how to get the record in this case without coming to Washington after it.

Mr. Watson. Maybe; I do not know. I do not know what he knew. I did not go to him because I was advised not to.

Mr. Webb. Are you sure you did not come to Washington until after the conference with Truesdale?

Mr. Watson. Sure. I know that the conference with Truesdale—this letter—I could not have told anything about this if I had not got some data. This letter is dated on the 2d; the telegram was on the 6th, and I know it was after the 6th.

Mr. Webb. Of October?

Mr. Watson. Of October; it was after that telegram.
Mr. Webb. How do you know it was after the 6th?
Mr. Watson. Because I met them on Monday or Tuesday.
Mr. Webb. That could have been the 6th, could it?
Mr. Watson. Yes. sir; it is an answer to that letter.
The CHAIRMAN. What letter? Name it so that it may go in the

Mr. Warson. The letter of October 2, 1911.

The letter referred to, heretofore marked "Exhibit 86," was at this point read in the record by the witness, as follows:

OCTOBER 2, 1911.

Mr. E. E. LOOMIS,

Vice President Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., 90 West Street, New York City.

Dear Sir: In relation to a matter existing between the Marian Coal Co. and your road and coal department, and also a claim against the traffic department of your road, which I have had under consideration here, and with which I presume you are more or less familiar, I decided, after a conference with your Mr. Phillips, of the coal department, to ask for a meeting with you and the president of your road, Mr. Truesdale, if convenient, at the earliest time you could find your way clear to meet me, either in New York or Scranton. If you will kindly advise me, either by wire or letter, I will hold myself in readiness to meet you on a few hours' notice.

I am, very truly, yours,

Mr. Webb. I asked you if you did not have this conference with Mr.

I am, very truly, yours,

Mr. Webb. I asked you if you did not have this conference with Mr. Truesdale and Mr. Loomis on the 6th day of October, the very day this telegram was sent to Washington?

Mr. Webb. You are willing to swear to that, are you; you remember distinctly it was not?

Mr. Webb. You are willing to swear to that, are you; you remember distinctly it was not?

Mr. Watson. I know it could not have been, because I know what I was occupied in that day. I know Mr. Boland was in my office in the morning, and it was a matter of some concern about getting away and how we could do it, and he came back in the afternoon, and then he brought his brother with him—Mr. William Boland came with him in the afternoon, after he had taken the telegram; he took the telegram in the morning.

Mr. Webb. You swear that telegram was not sent after you had the conference with Mr. Truesdale?

Mr. Watson. Surely, or I would not have been asking for the conference.

ference.

Mr. Webb. I wish you would not reason about it; are you willing to swear it was not sent on the day you had the conference with Trues-swear it was not sent on the day you had the conference with Truesdale?

Mr. Watson. On that day?

Mr. Webb. Yes.

Mr. Watson. I do not know when the telegram was sent. The telegram I wrote was written on the 6th of October, apparently.

Mr. Watson. I was in Washington the 7th day of October. I came down here on the 7th. I know the meeting with Truesdale was several days after that.

Mr. Webb. When were you subpensed to come down to Washington?

Mr. Watson. Saturday noon, I think.

Mr. Webb. You mean last Saturday noon?

Mr. Watson. Yes.

Mr. Webb. With whom have you discussed this case, or who has talked to you about it, since it sprang up.

Mr. Watson. Some people have laughed at me, that is all, because I was subpensed.

Mr. Webb. Has anybody talked to you about this case? You know what I mean.

Was Subpensed.

Mr. Webb. Has anybody talked to you about what I mean.

Mr. Watson. What I was to say, or what they wanted me to say?

Mr. Webb. Has anybody discussed the case with you at all?

Mr. Watson. No.

Mr. Webb. Not a living soul?

Mr. Watson. No; not to mention the case—only the fact of my mention.

Mr. Watson. No; not to mention the case—only the fact of my coming.

Mr. Webb. Just laughed at you?

Mr. Watson. Some have, yes; not everybody.

Mr. Watson. Some have, yes; not everybody.

Mr. Webb. You can not remember a single person during the last two months who has discussed this case with you?

Mr. Watson. That is too long. I was not subpensed two months ago. I suppose I have talked about it many times in two months.

Mr. Webb. I was going beyond the subpense. I want to know if, in the last two months, anybody has talked to you about this case, and, if so, who it was.

Mr. Watson. Within two months, since this case has been called here.

the last two months, anybody has talked fo you about this case, and, if so, who it was.

Mr. Watsox, Within two months, since this case has been called here, there has been more or less discussion of the case. I presume I have talked with a dozen people.

Mr. Webb. Not over some of them?

Mr. Webb. Not a single soul?

Mr. Webb. Not a single soul?

Mr. Watsox. I could not tell you one.

Mr. Webb. Not a single soul?

Mr. Watsox. No; because it was a source of common gossip, the talk of the streets; people were talking about it.

Mr. Webb. Did you talk with men or women?

Mr. Watsox. Judge Edwards talked to me about it, if I knew anything about it. Judge Kelly, who is now off the bench, he says, "What do you know about the Archbald case?" Gorman Thomas says, "I hear you have to go to Washington and testify. What do you know about it?" Mr. Allen, another man who is in the commissioner's office, was present when I was subpeched, and he says, "It serves you right," or something of that kind. Something was said about my going to Washington. But to get down into the merits of the case, nobody ever talked to me about it.

Mr. Webb. Not a soul ever asked you what you knew about it?

Mr. Webb. Not a soul ever asked you what you knew about it?

Mr. Webb. Not a short a way as I could.

Mr. Webb. Who was it?

Mr. Webb. Who was it?

Mr. Webb. Would you not know, but I think I have heard that from somebody, "I wonder what he is going to swear to," or "What does he know?"

Mr. Webb. Would you not know if a man were so impertinent as to

Mr. Webb. Would you not know if a man were so impertinent as to ask you what you were going to swear to?

Mr. Watson. I was in the prothonotary's office—that is the clerk's office in our State—a day or so ago, since this case has been discussed here, and there were some people said about what they were going to swear to, "What does he know?" or "What does this one know?" or "What does that one know?" That was by the clerks in the office, and I can name one or two of them I know. Whether it was they or not I do not know who asked this question.

Mr. Webb. Has any lawyer in Scranton ever asked you what you knew about it?

Mr. Watson. I do not recall any now. They all knew pretty well, because they were reading the newspapers.

Mr. Webb. Have you seen or talked with the judge in the last few months about anything?

Mr. Watson. Judge Archbaid?

Mr. Webb. Yes.

Mr. Watson. I saw Judge Archbaid two or three weeks ago on Sunday, when I was either going to church or he was—no; I was going to church and he was coming down. That is all the time I have seen him that I recall in two or three months.

Mr. Webb. Watson. I do not know. I think I asked him how he was getting along—maybe I did. Maybe he said it was going all right—something like that.

Mr. Webb. "I t" was going all right—did you mean this matter?

Mr. Watson. I think I alluded to it, if I said that. I have no doubt that something was said about this hearing, but the nature of it I do not know. I can not talk to Judge Archbaid about this matter.

Mr. Webb. You did; you broached it to him; asked him how he was getting along.

Mr. Watson. Just incidentally; but to go into the detail, I would

Mr. Webb. You did; you broached it to him; asked him how he was getting along.

Mr. Wayson. Just incidentally; but to go into the detail, I would not do it, and I have not talked to him.

Mr. Webb. You never mentioned your connection with the case at all; what you knew?

Mr. Wayson. I de not think so.

Mr. Webb. Do you not know? That has just been three weeks ago.

Mr. Wayson. That I mentioned my connection?

Mr. Webb. Can you not be more frank with us and tell us the truth, whether or not you talked about this case with Judge Archbald?

Mr. Wayson. I did not talk with Judge Archbald about anything I would testify to, or what I did, or what I said, or what I was going to say.

Mr. Webb. Can you not be more frank with us and tell us the truth, whether or not you talked about this case with Judge Archbald?

Mr. WATSON. I did not talk with Judge Archbald about anything I would testify to, or what I did, or what I said, or what I was going to say.

Mr. Webb. What did you talk to him about?

Mr. Watson. And he replied the same, and I went on my way, and he went on his way.

Mr. Webb. That is all that was said?

Mr. Watson. And he replied the same, and I went on my way, and he went on his way.

Mr. Webb. That is all that was said?

Mr. Watson. That is all I recall. There might have been more said. I do not know what was said. He might have talked about some condition; might have asked me if I remembered something.

Mr. Webb. Had any witnesses testified then?

Mr. Webb. Had any witnesses testified then, when you and the judge met and discussed matters on Sunday morning?

Mr. Watson. I can not say that. I have been fairly busy in the last week or 10 days, or two weeks, and I have not charged my mind with every little thing that has been going on there. I have not been reading this case, except at nighttime when I would go home I would pick up the newspaper.

Mr. Watson. I knew that there was a committee appointed for the purpose, or he was cited before the Judgleary Committee of Congress; I knew that. I did know that later along Mr. Martin and Mr. Price had come down here, after some one told me that.

Mr. Webb. You knew all that, and you knew that when you and the judge met that morning?

Mr. Watson. No; when I met the judge was before they came.

Mr. Webb. You knew all that, and you knew told us everything you said to the judge and all the judge was before they amount they came.

Mr. Webb. You we mean to say now that you have told us everything you said to the judge and all the judge was before they.

Mr. Watson. But I do not think these people were bere.

Mr. Webb. Thoy you mean to say now that you have told all that was said to the judge and all the judge said to you about this case in t

Mr. Webb. That is as near as you can tell us the details of the conversation you had with the judge the first time you saw him after he was cited to appear down here? Have you seen him since to talk with him?

WATSON. Yes; I talked to him. I said, "How do you do this morning."

Mr. Webb. Have you seen him any other time; anywhere else outside of this room?

Mr. Warson. Yes; down on the corner of the street. I walked down with him, and Mr. Worthington was making some arrangement for them to go down town, and Judge Archbaid's sons were along with him. Maybe we went down on the elevator together; I do not know that. But I know I met them on the corner of the street, because I asked somebody where I could get something to eat, and they told me to go around here somewhere.

Mr. Webb. You do not know whether you went down on the elevator with him or not?

Mr. Watson. I do not know.

Mr. Watson. I do not know.

Mr. Watson. He may have been on the elevator; I do not know. I am not tagging him up. When I got out there I know I saw him on the street corner, because I talked to him. I spoke to him something about the weather, or the way he was going down town.

The Chairman. Mr. Watson, since this investigation has been begun by this committee of Judge Archbald's conduct, you say you had a conversation with him in Scranton about the investigation?

"Mr. Watson. No; I do not think I met him but once, and that was when I asked him how he was getting along.

The Chairman. I just simply want to get at what you said and what he said at that time. As near as you can tell the committee, oblige us by telling, as near as you can recollect, what the judge said and what you said.

Mr. Watson. The only thing I recall asking him was how he was get.

he said at that time. As near as you can tell the committee, oblige us by telling, as near as you can recollect, what the judge said and what you said.

Mr. Watson. The only thing I recall asking him was how he was getting along, and he replied; he may have told me considerable, and may have said, "Well, we are going along; we have been taking testimony"; and he may have given me something of the nature of the testimony."; do not recall whether he did or not. But he led me to understand it was all right, it was getting along all right, just as he expected it would. That is about all there was of it.

The Chairman. That was on Sunday?

Mr. Watson. On Sunday morning. I remember telling him that I was going to church when I met him.

The Chairman. I wish you would tell the committee exactly what happened at this conference between you and Mr. Truesdale and Mr. Loomis, everything that you said, everything that Mr. Loomis said, and in your own way; I have not got that matter clear. There have been disjointed statements, more or less, made, and I would like to have a verbal photograph, if I may so speak, of the conversation had between the three of you.

Mr. Watson. I will try to give you the conversation.

The Chairman. Just what Truesdale said, just what Loomis said, and just what you said, without going off into foreign matter.

Mr. Watson. Do you desire me to give you the reason I went there?

The Chairman. No, sir. Just find yourself right in conference with Truesdale and Loomis, and tell us exactly what Truesdale, Loomis, and you said, as near as you can, and as fully as you can remember.

Mr. Watson. I went to the office of the Lackawanna road—it is in the depot, the new depot, the coal office is over it—and sat down there for a moment, and some young man took me into Mr. Phillips's office adjoining the room I was in, and Mr. Phillips met me and shook hands with me, and in a moment or so Mr. Loomis and Mr. Truesdale came in the office. There may have been some one else, but if so I do not remember who it was.

a thousand or two dollars on the rate cases."

Then I get into an argument with him about that these rates had been fixed in an arbitrary way, and in the time when there was no supervision over rates, and that the Lackawanna had been slow to change their rates, that they had kept their switching charges, which I had a memorandum of. If they were true, it was the most outrageous charges I ever heard of they were charging these people for shipping their cars, and I read those to him. "Well," he says, "switching engines cost money," or something of the kind, and laughed about it. Finally Mr. Truesdale wanted me to show him those switching charges, and I read them to him, and handed him the paper I had them marked on Finally Mr. Truesdale wanted me to show him those switching charges, and I read them to him, and handed him the paper I had them marked on.

Now, I recall there was something like 30 cents charged to one man, a coal operator, and I may be mistaken, but it strikes me it was more than a dollar to Mr. Boland for a like service, or to this washery. He said that could not be so, and they would investigate it. We got at the washery, and he turned to Mr. Phillips and asked Mr. Phillips—I think this was Truesdale that asked Phillips—if he had made up the data on that washery, and he said he had, and he read it, or a summary of it, or the conclusions that he had come to, and I am quite sure that he said it inventoried $14,000, and he says, "What are you asking us $161,000 for?" I tried to explain to him that it was a settlement of rates and that I had been advised by Mr. Boland that I could not settle a rate claim with them, and that they could use this washery, and buy it for that amount of money, and that would adjust their rate cases. He said that the amount was too high, and that he would not recognize any claim of more than twelve or fifteen thousand dollars. He said it was enough; and then Mr. Loomis told me what a washery it was and how little profit there was in the business, and how the Peale story of, I think, not cleaning the coal was true; that the Peale story of a trade of coal from the Lackawanna, giving it to the Lackawanna and taking something else in return for it; he said it was all rot. This is Loomis that said that. Mr. Phillips rather supplemented that; said it was not true. Then I talked with Mr. Loomis about the advisability of adjusting those matters and doing away with the litigation, and he said that that was true, but that the amount asked was too great; that they could not excuse themselves for spending $150,000, or $160.000, or even less—he told me how much; I think about twenty or fifteen thousand, or something, would be the maximum amount. I showed him the map that had been given me by Mr.

I went to Mr. Boland and told him—I think Will Boland first—and from that day until this I have done nothing toward an adjustment. Of the papers and the data that I had; whatever memoranda I had saved I gave to him, and I recall there were contracts, there was a charter—a copy of a charter—there was a map, and there was a good manual to the papers and the data that I had; whatever memoranda I had saved I gave to him, and I recall there were contracts, there was a charter—a copy of a charter—there was a map, and there was a good manual to the save of the copy of the charter—there was a map, and there was a good manual to the copy of the charter of the charter of the copy of the charter of th

The CHAIRMAN. Do you remember of the conference with Judge Archbald?

Mr. WATSON. No; I never heard of it. I never heard of the conference never heard of anything; so I know nothing about it; absolutely nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know why Judge Archbald interested himself in the matter at that point, or subsequently?

Mr. WATSON. I do not. He certainly did not do it at my request, because I did not know it was done until I heard it here.

Mr. Webb. A few days ago it was asked here if Judge Archbald had not written Mr. Christy Boland, saying, "My Dear Christy: I have seen the parties and the case can not be settled," or something like that; and later Mr. Worthington introduced a letter addressed to G. M. Watson, starting out "My Dear George," and stating practically the same?

Mr. Worthington, No; the letter produced was addressed to

Mr. Worthington, No: the letter produced was addressed to Christy—"My Dear Christy."

The Chairman, The "Dear Christy" letter was put in evidence.

Mr. Worthington. No: I did not put it in evidence. I showed it to C. G. Boland, and he could not identify it.

Mr. Webb. Where is that letter?

The Chairman. I think you will find in the printed record the letter addressed to C. G. Boland, and beginning "My Dear Christy."

Mr. Worthington. It begins "My Dear Christy." That is the letter. I really do not recollect whether I have it here or not. I handed it up to some of the committee at the time.

Mr. Webb. I would like to see a copy of that letter. I thought you offered it in evidence, but I do not find it here.

Did you ever get such a letter as that from Judge Archbald, saying "My Dear George: I have seen the parties, and the transaction is all off"?

Mr. Watson No. Judge Archbald never told me that he had over

Did you ever get such a letter as that from Judge Archbald, saying "My Dear George: I have seen the parties, and the transaction is all off."?

Mr. WATSON, No. Judge Archbald never told me that he had ever said one word to those people, so I do not know if he did or did not. If he did, he never communicated that fact to me, either by word of mouth or letter. Let me correct myself just a little on that. I think that I did know of the fact, either through him or somebody else, of his talking with Loomis at the club before I ever went near them. I think I did know that.

Mr. Webb. Did what?

Mr. WATSON, I think some one told me that Judge Archbald met Mr. Loomis at the Scranton Club before I took this matter up with the Lackawanna road, before I had even met Mr. Loomis. I think I heard that, and maybe Judge Archbald told me that he did meet him there. Outside of that, Judge Archbald has never said one word to me about a statement of this case, price, condition, or settlement, when I was going to settle, or what I was going to do with the proceeds.

Mr. Webb. Then you never heard from Judge Archbald has never told you on the phone, or talked to you, or written you, that the transaction was all off?

Mr. WATSON. In relation to this case?

Mr. WATSON. In relation to this case?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. Webb. This is the only case you have had to do with?

Mr. WATSON. No; I do not think so. I do not think I ever talked with him about it at all. As a matter of fact, I did not see Judge Archbald very much, and I would remember if he had talked with me about this case, and I do not think that he did or that I did.

Mr. Sterling. You say some one told you that Judge Archbald had talked to Loomis at the club about it?

Mr. WATSON. That is another hazy thing. Perhaps it was Judge Archbald who told me that he had seen Mr. Loomis up at the club?

Mr. WATSON. That is another hazy thing. Perhaps it was Judge Archbald who told me that he had seen Mr. Loomis up at the club?

Mr. WATSON. Before I had gone to the Lackawanna; I think I

Mr. Sterling. You said that occurred before you had been engaged by the Bolands.

Mr. Watson. If I did, then I want to correct my testimony, because I know nothing about Judge Archbald talking with him, except it happened since my engagement on these cases.

Mr. Sterling. Who told you that they had a conversation at the club?

Mr. Watson. It may have been Judge Archbald who told me that he had met Mr. Loomis there.

Mr. Sterling. What did Judge Archbald tell you they had said?

Mr. Watson. I do not know, unless he said to me that "I met Mr. Loomis, and he will meet you." I know I got that information, and I am sure from Judge Archbald, that Mr. Loomis told him he would meet me.

Mr. Sterling. Where did that conversation occur?

meet me.

Mr. Sterling. Where did that conversation occur?

Mr. Watson. It may have happened in his office or it may have happened on the street; I do not know. I did not go to his office very much—very frequently. I do not recall his being in my office.

Mr. Sterling. How did he come to tell you that?

Mr. Watson. Because he volunteered to introduce me to Loomis, or I had asked him to do it. He either said he would, or I asked him if he would not do it.

Mr. Sterling. This was not in his office when you told him that

Nr. Warson (interrupting). That was right in his office. Mr. Sterling. It was there that he told you he had talked with Mr. Watson (interrupting). That was right in his office.

Mr. Sterling. It was there that he told you he had talked with Loomis?
Mr. Watson. No; because he had not talked with him then. It was after that that he talked to him.
Mr. Sterling. Where was it?
Mr. Watson. It may have been in his office.
Mr. Sterling. Where did you see him where he told you he had talked with him at the club?
Mr. Watson. I would think it was in his office.
Mr. Sterling. Did you go there to see him about it?
Mr. Watson. No.
Mr. Sterling. What did you go for?
Mr. Watson. I do not know.
Mr. Sterling. You did see him, then, and asked him if he had talked to Loomis?
Mr. Watson. I do not think I did. I think he voluntarily said he had seen Loomis and Loomis would see me. I am quite sure he told me that.
Mr. Sterling. He volunteered to tell you that he had seen Mr. Loomis and that Loomis would see you with reference to this dump?
Mr. Watson. You have included not only what he volunteered to say, but what Mr. Loomis said. I would not go as far as that. But my recollection is that Mr. Loomis would see me. I think that is what he said. I recall very well the morning I went along past his door, he was talking with some man—perhaps Mr. Green, or somebody—and he says, "Say, by the way, I saw that man." That is what I remember about it. "You can see him. It will be all right. Make an arrangement with him. You had better do it through somebody." Whether he mentioned the man or not, the man at the station who would know when he would be there, to call me on the phone—
Mr. Sterling. How long was that after your first conversation?
Mr. Watson. I do not know. Maybe a week, maybe two weeks, maybe three weeks; I do not know.

Mr. Sterling. He just said to you, then, that he had seen that man? Mr. WATSON. Yes.
Mr. Sterling. You knew whom he meant?
Mr. WATSON. When he mentioned his name I stopped.
Mr. STERLING. Did he mention his name, or that he had seen "that an"?

man"?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.
Mr. STERLING. Did he just say to you that he had seen that man?
Mr. WATSON. Yes; but I stopped, and he said, "Mr. Loomis will meet you," as I recall it now.
Mr. STERLING. What other conversations did you have with Judge Archbaid?
Mr. WATSON. I do not think any at that time, and I do not know that I talked with him since.
Mr. STERRING. Are you acquainted with these two gentlemen who sit on either side of Mr. Worthington [referring to Mr. Price and Mr. Martin]? Martin]?
Mr. Warson. Yes; I think I know them. I have known them a
Mr. Warson. Yes; I think I know them. I have known them a

Martin]?

Mr. Watson. Yes; I think I know them. I have known them a great many years.

Mr. Sterling. Mr. Martin and Mr. Price; are those their names?

Mr. Watson. Yes.

Mr. Sterling. How long have you known them?

Mr. Watson. I have known Mr. Price for more than 30 years.

Mr. Sterling. They live in Scranton?

Mr. Watson. Yes. I have known Mr. Price for more than 30 years, and I have known Mr. Martin since he was a boy living up at Moscow.

Mr. Sterling. They are practicing attorneys at Scranton?

Mr. Watson. Oh, yes.

Mr. Sterling. And they have offices in the same place you do, the same building?

Mr. Watson. Mr. Martin's office is in the Connell Building. Mr. Price's office is in the board of trade now, I think; is it not, Mr. Price's office is in the board of trade now, I think; is it not, Mr. Price?

Mr. Price Yes.

Mr. Sterling. Has either of those gentlemen talked to you about this case since it became public?

Mr. Watson. No.

Mr. Sterling. Since the papers first published an account of these charges?

Mr. Watson. No.

Mr. Jewe not spoken to Mr. Price until I met.

Air. Sterling. Since the papers first published an account of these charges?

Mr. Watson. No, sir. I have not spoken to Mr. Price until I met him, I think, here this morning. I have not seen him since this matter has been going on. Mr. Martin, I met him—I do not know when he came home—some time when he came home from here; maybe it was Saturday night or Sunday, this last week some day, when he came up; I saw him on the street by the office building, and I said to him, "How are you getting along?" He says, "All right. I can not talk to you now," and he went into the building.

There was some lady with him, maybe a stenographer that came over with him. That is the extent of my conversation with Mr. Martin until yesterday morning on the train. Mr. McGardee and Mr. Martin got on the train I was on, and I did not want to get off because they got on, and I have been advised that Mr. Martin would not talk to me; but he did, and we talked about everything from killing chickens to running automobiles, from Philadelphia, or Wayne Junction.

Mr. Sterkling. Have you ever talked with Mr. Martin about this case?

Mr. Watson, I have not

Mr. Watson. I have not.
Mr. Strellno. If you had said that five minutes ago you would have saved a lot of time.
Mr. Norms. I want to ask you again, Mr. Watson, about that meeting with these railroad officials. In answer to the question of the chairman you reviewed what happened. Have you told us all that occurred?
Mr. Watson, I do not think I have told half that was said there.

colliman you reviewed what happened. Have you told us all that occurred?

Mr. Watson. I do not think I have told half that was said there, because there was more or less talk about these matters.

Mr. Nornis. You know the chairman asked you to tell all?

Mr. Watson. I can not tell all.

Mr. Nornis. Have you told all you know?

Mr. Watson. I have told about all that I can remember, only I know there was a great deal more conversation, because we talked an hour and a half.

Mr. Nornis. In listening to you tell what occurred there I did not notice that you made any use of those briefs you had come to Washington to get at the time you wired Judge Archbald.

Mr. Watson. You did not notice it?

Mr. Nornis. No.

Mr. Watson. I will tell you what I did, and the brief I had before that committee. I had a statement made up of my own, made from the data given me by Mr. Boland, together with what I had learned as to the rates that had been changed in the Meeker case.

Mr. Nornis. I do not care for that; that is not answering my question. Will you tell us the use you made of those briefs?

Mr. Watson. Only the information I got from them; that is all.

Mr. Norris. You have not told us anything yet. All the information you have told about using was what you got from Mr. Boland, or simply you knew yourself.

Mr. Watson. I did not get very much information from those books; no; that is true. But I did get a discussion of rates in there.

Mr. Norris. You had a discussion of rates in there.

Mr. Norris. Sut had a discussion of rates.

Mr. Norris. But you did not accomplish anything on that, notwithstanding those briefs in that other case. You did not seem to know enough about rates to hold up your end of the debate with those officials.

Mr. Watson. I knew what they were doing there, and the largest part of this matter was made up of a shipment to Stroudsburg, and

Mr. Watson. I knew what they were doing there, and the largest part of this matter was made up of a shipment to Stroudsburg, and to, maybe, the Lehigh & Hudson—some railroad; I forget the title of it now. That was the largest thing we talked about. There were a good many hundred dollars, a good many thousand dollars.

Mr. Norris. Do you remember the date of that?

Mr. WATSON. That I can not give you, because the paper there—
Mr. Norris. It was Monday or Tuesday after your trip to Washington?

Ington?

Mr. Watson. This meeting?
Mr. Norris. Yes.
Mr. Norris. Yes.
Mr. Norris. Can you be positive it was after your trip to Washington?
Mr. Watson. I can be positive; so that I am sure that I did not meet those people until Monday or Tuesday after the 6th.
Mr. Norris. After the 6th?
Mr. Watson. Yes; I am sure of that.

Mr. Norris. I want to ask you again, Will you swear positively that that meeting with those officials in Scranton occurred after your trip to Washington, the time you had wired Judge Archbald to meet you?

Mr. Watson, No, sir; I will not swear positively to anything that happened after that meeting; I do not know.

Mr. Norris. Do you want this committee to understand that you do not know whether that took place before or after that trip to Washington?

not know whether that took place best ington?

Mr. Warson. I am of the opinion that it took place after my coming here, and I do not know how it could have taken place before, because I am sure I came here for information, and I would not have come for information.

Mr. Norris. You know whether it took place before or afterwards, do you not?

Mr. Norris. You know whether it took place before or afterwards, do you not?
Mr. Watson. My recollection is it took place before.
Mr. Norris. But you will not swear to it?
Mr. Watson. I want to get some data, because I do not know.
Mr. Norris. Then why do you not say so?
Mr. Watson. The thing may have happened, and it may not have, that I used those books, and I came after them for that purpose, just that very purpose, and it was for my information.
Mr. Norris. You might have come after them for some other purpose?
Mr. Watson. No: not some other purpose: it was on the same case.

Mr. Norris. 15u might mave come after them for some other purpose?

Mr. Watson. No; not some other purpose; it was on the same case.

Mr. Norris. Then you must have come after them for that purpose.

I would like to know, if you can tell, if you can make it positive, whether that thing took place before or after your trip to Washington?

Mr. Watson. My recollection is that is what I came to Washington for—to get the information.

Mr. Norris. I know; you said that before.

Mr. Watson. That is my recollection, and I swear to the best of my recollection that is what I did.

Mr. Norris. That is all.

Mr. Webb. On that point, you say the next day was Sunday?

Mr. Watson. After I was here? Yes.

Mr. Webb. You were here on the 6th?

Mr. Watson. No; I was here on the 7th. It was the 6th that I sent the telegram.

Mr. Warson, No; I was here on the ren.
Mr. Warson, No; I was here on the ren.
Mr. Were. You were here the 7th, were you?
Mr. Warson. Yes. I remember that I went from New York up on Sunday, because I could not get up from Philadelphia on the Belvidere

Mr. Watson. It may have been later in the week; but I think it was right close on the heels of my being here. If I had kept a record, which I thought I had, I could have given you the dates.

Mr. Webb. Did you ever tell Mr. Boland that Judge Archbald would not take your watch, but he might take your chain?

Mr. Watson. No, sir; I never heard of that until I read it in the papers.

which I thought I had, I could have given you the dates.

Mr. Webb. Did you ever tell Mr. Boland that Judge Archbald would not take your watch, but he might take your chain?

Mr. Watson. No, sir; I never heard of that until I read it in the papers.

Mr. Webb. You never used that expression?

Mr. Watson. In never did in my life in relation to Judge Archbald; no. I never heard it until I read it in the papers.

Mr. Watson. In never did in my life in relation to Judge Archbald; no. I never heard it until I read it in the papers.

Mr. Watson. In relation to a watch and chain? I should say not. I do not think I ever used that expression. I thought it was a kind of a new one on me, "take your chain and leave your watch," or "take your watch and leave your chain." I do not know that I ever heard that. It sounded foreign to me.

Mr. Webb. I ask you if you did not show W. P. Boland a letter from Judge Archbald starting out, "blear George," and telling you that the deal had fallen through. Do you not remember getting that letter?

Mr. Watson. I say positively that I never received a letter like that from Judge Archbald; never; and I could not have shown it to Boland if I had not received it.

The Chairman. Mr. Worthington, you may question the witness if you desire.

Mr. Worthington. One thing, there has been some testimony here in relation to you that I have not heard you asked about, and that is about a division of the difference between one hundred thousand and a hundred and sixty thousand dollars into fours. Have you read the testimony on that subject?

Mr. Worthington. What have you to say about it, Mr. Watson?

Mr. Watson. I never heard that until I read it.

Mr. Worthington. What have you to say about it, Mr. Watson?

Mr. Watson. I never heard that until I read it.

Mr. Worthington. Was there any suggestion by anybody, while the negotiations were going on, that Mr. Phillips or Mr. Loomis should participate in what was to be paid?

Mr. Watson. No tweet heard was to get any money out of this, and one was me. That is orad company?

Mr. Watson. I think the paper Mr. Boland gave me showed shipping charges, switching charges, rates, and mileage, and it was brought to me in rather a fragmentary way, and then afterwards compiled. I had it in form when I was over before the railroad people.

Mr. Worthington. What did you do with that paper that was in form?

Mr. Worthington. I gave it back to Mr. Belend.

form?
Mr. Watson, I gave it back to Mr. Boland.
Mr. Worthington. Which Mr. Boland?
Mr. Watson, Mr. W. P. Boland, I think, took all of the papers, the contract, a copy of the charter, and a map, and everything. I told him I could do nothing with it, and I gave it to him.
Mr. Worthington. When did you give it back to him?

Mr. Warson. It was just after this interview. When I decided I could not do anything, that is when it was; I do not know when that Mr. Worthington. About the third paper that you received when you were down here in Washington, on the 7th of October; do you recall anything about what the indorsement on it was?

Mr. Watson. No; because it may have been a statement of this case; I do not know.

Mr. Worthington. What has become of that paper?

Mr. Watson. I do not know; I supposed I had it.

Mr. Worthington. What instruction was given to the clerk, or the official who went off to get the papers? What was said to him about what he was to get?

Mr. Watson. I think I told him that I wanted to get the record of this case. I think I gave him all the instruction that was given him. I think I asked him what he had on that Meeker case, and he brought back this stuff.

Mr. Worthington. Can you tell the committee whether or not that I think I asked him what he had on that Meeker case, and he brought back this stuff.

Mr. Worthington. Can you tell the committee whether or not that other paper book which you got was a copy of the petition which was filed in the Court of Commerce, and which contained the opinion in full of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the case?

Mr. Warson. I could not tell you, but I know I got information from one of these papers, and I did not find it in these books.

Mr. Worthington. As to these books, look on page 17. There is something there I would like to have read into the record, about what the Interstate Commerce Commission had said in the way of reducing rates. Will you look at that book, on page 17?

Mr. Warson. I remember seeing that.

Mr. Worthington. I would like to have that read into the record. The Chairman. All right.

Mr. Worthington. I would like to have that read into the record. The Chairman. All right.

Mr. Worthington. Read it into the record, then, just that quotation. Mr. Norris. Let us get what it is first.

Mr. Worthington. It is a quotation.

Mr. Norris. I understand it is a quotation taken from the brief.

Mr. Norris. Which brief?

Mr. Norris. State also from what the quotation is taken, so that we will understand just a little what he is reading.

The Chairman. Yes; tell us the title of the pamphlet, and then the page the quotation is on.

Mr. Worthington. It have already stated it is a brief that was filed on behalf of Meeker in the Commerce Court.

The Chairman. By whom?

Mr. Worthington. By William A. Glasgow, jr., counsel for Henry Mr. Worthington.

on behalf of Meeker in the Commerce Court.

The CHAIRMAN By whom?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. By William A. Glasgow, jr., counsel for Henry E. Meeker, surviving partiner.

The CHAIRMAN. You desire to read something?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. On page 17, under the heading, "The conclusion reached by the commission was," then in quotation marks the conclusion reached by the commission in the reduction of rates.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness says he remembers having read that. Mr. WATSON. I do not remember reading that. I remember I got the information somewhere, and I might possibly have read that; I presume I did.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness says he remembers having read that, Mr. WATSON. I do not remember reading that. I remember I got the information somewhere, and I might possibly have read that; I presume I did.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. May I read it, to save the witness?

Mr. WATSON. I wish you would.

The CHAIRMAN. You may read it, Mr. Worthington.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The quotation is this:

"After careful study of defendant's exhibits, relating to tonnage and cost of movement, as well as a painstaking analysis of defendant's voluminous exhibits respecting its past and present financial condition, we are of opinion, and so find, that defendant's rates for the transportation of coal from the Wyoming region to Perth Amboy of $1.55 per gross ton on prepared sizes, $1.40 on pae coal, and $1.20 on buckwheat roal are unreasonable so far as they exceed $1.40 on prepared sizes, $1.30 on pea coal, and $1.15 on buckwheat."

Have you any means of fixing, by reference to anything you have, or may be able to put your hands on, the date of that meeting with Mr. Truesdale and Mr. Loomis in Scranton?

Mr. WATSON. I have nothing but this letter [indicating].

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is the letter of October 2?

Mr. WATSON. Marked "Exhibit 86." That is the only thing I have, and I am quite sure that I met these people very soon after, and I think it was the following Monday or Tuesday. That is from recolection. I recall that I was advised of their coming by some one calling me, which I believe to have been Mr. Phillips, who was here and testified. On that call, or that notice that they would be in Scranton, I want to ask the witness a question about this [referring to brief]. This statement that was read by Mr. Worthington from page 17 of this brief you say was called to your attention, and you got that information somewhere?

Mr. WATSON. Yes; I read it somewhere; and more than that, very much more than that.

Mr. Norris. The information contained in that statement would not be of any value, would it, in that discussion with those railroad compa wheat."

Where is Perth Amboy?

Mr. Warson, It is on tidewater in New Jersey, close to New York That is a point where the reights, or the tarift, is just the same as it is to Hoboken, across the river.

Mr. Norman, And the Wyoming region was this same region?

Mr. Warson, The Wyoming region is a few miles below Scranton, Mr. Norman, and the Wyoming region is a few miles below Scranton, Mr. Norman, Do you know whether that is the only quotation from the opinion of the Interstate Commerce Commission that you saw?

Mr. Warson, I do not recall that I do not recall reading that out if I read the book, I read it.

Mr. Norman, I thought you studied it so closely you would perhaps remember it yet.

Lase: I think I did.

Mr. Norman, I do not.

Mr. Norman, Who paid your expenses down to Washington to get the Interstate Commerce Commission opinion in the other brief?

Mr. Warson, I do not.

Mr. Norman, Who paid your expenses down to Washington to get the Norman, Who paid your expenses down to Washington to get Mr. Warson, I do not.

Mr. Warson, I the superior of the telegram, and some time in the afternoon Mr. Christy Boland came and gave me $50.

Mr. Warson, I prepared the telegram, and some time in the afternoon Mr. Christy Boland came and gave me $50.

Mr. Norman, That was to pay your expenses?

Mr. Warson, I suppose so. That is what I used if for.

Mr. Norman, That was to pay your expenses?

Mr. Warson, I suppose so. That is what I used if for.

Mr. Norman, And all you for that $50 were these two little burst of the part of the COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Tuesday, May 28, 1912.

The committee met at 10.35 o'clock a. m., Hon. Henry D. Clayton (chairman) presiding.

Present: The committee; Hon. Robert W. Archbald; Hon. A. S. Worthington, M. J. Martin, Esq., and Samuel B. Price, Esq., counsel for Judge Archbald; Wrisley Brown, Esq., assistant to the Attorney General, and others.

FURTHER TESTIMONY OF GEORGE M. WATSON. The Chairman. Mr. Watson, I understand that you desire to say something further?
Mr. Watson. I wish to make a statement in relation to the meeting.

The CHAIRMAN, Yes.

Mr. Watson. Last night in thinking over the meeting in the Lackawinna office, the question was asked me, and asked Mr. Phillips also, as I recall, if Judge Archbald's name was mentioned in that conference, Now, Judge Archbald's name was mentioned in that conference, and my recollection is, by Mr. Loomis, who passed some comment on Judge Archbald and our being there at that meeting. He said it loud enough so that all ought to hear, because I was farther from him than Mr. Phillips, or even Mr. Truesdale, and he spoke out and said something: "We are here," or "How is Judge Archbald'?" or something like that, which implied, as I took it, that we were there by some arrangement that Judge Archbald had made.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was it who said that?

Mr. WATSON. I think it was Mr. Loomis.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Loomis, you think, said it?

Mr. WATSON. I think so. I don't know why Mr. Truesdale would say it, unless he had been advised by some one else, because I had not written him, and I know it must have happened in that meeting, because Mr. Loomis did say something about Judge Archbald, and it was the only time I met Mr. Loomis—so it must have been in that meeting. I want that corrected, to correct my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, your statement this morning will, of course, go into the printed record.

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And when your testimony is under consideration this will be considered in connection with your previous statement.

Mr. WATSON. That is all I desired to say. It came to my mind last evening, or last night, and I wanted to correct it.

Mr. WATSON. That is all I desired to say. It came to my mind last evening, or last night, and I wanted to correct it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I said last night that I would get a copy of the perition that was filed in the Commence Court in the Meeker case and exhibit to the witness, and see if he could identify that as one of the papers that he got when he came down here. We got that paper, but I left it at my office and one of our party has go

C. G. BOLAND, Esq.,
Scranton, Pa.

My Dear Christy: I had an interview with our friend this afternoon, and I regret to say that I did not succeed in doing anything. I tried to get him to make a counter proposition to the one which had been submitted upon your side. But he seemed to feel that the amount which he would be willing to offer was so inconsiderable that it was hardly worth the while. I regret to report this as the final outcome of the efforts of settlement which have been made, but I see nothing to be attained any further here.

or settlement which have been made, but I see nothing to be attained any further here.

I return herewith the papers which you let me have.
Yours, very truly,

Mr. Webs. Who is that supposed to be signed by? It is a copy.
Mr. Worthington. It is supposed to be signed by Judge Archbald.
The Chairman. Do not let us have suppositions. You are Judge Archbald's counsel. Is that a copy of the "Dear Christy" letter that Judge Archbald sent?

Mr. Worthington. I am informed that it is a copy of that letter sent to him. The committee will remember that I produced that letter sent to him. The committee will remember that I produced that letter hand showed it to Boland and asked if it was not a copy of the letter he received, and he could not identify it; neither could W. P. Boland say that there ever was such a letter seen by him.

The Chairman. There is a great deal of latitude allowed by the committee in taking testimony in an investigation of this sort, but I hardly think it ought to cover suppositions.

Mr. Worthington. This letter is referred to on page 554 of serial No. 5.

The Chairman. Then you will want to interrogate Mr. Westen for

The Chairman. Then you will want to interrogate Mr. Watson further when the paper comes from your office to which you have just referred?

ther when the paper comes from your office to which you have just referred?

Mr. Worthington. I should like to.

The Chairman. Well, you may do that. [The paper above referred to having been received, the following took place:]

Mr. Worthington. Mr. Chairman, I have shown Mr. Watson this paper, and I will ask him some questions about it.

The Chairman. Very well.

Mr. Worthington. I want to show you this paper entitled "Petition and exhibits" in No. 49, United States Commerce Court, and ask you what is your recollection as to whether that is one of the papers you got when you were down here on the 7th of October last?

Mr. Watson. The last part of this book is the information that I had when I talked with the people in the Lackawanna office.

The Chairman. Please give Mr. Worthington, if you can, a categorical answer to his question, and then make your explanation.

Mr. Watson. I got a book like this at the time I was here, but whether that was the information that I carried in there, or whether it was made from a typewritten statement that I had in my possession, I do not know. I do not know whether I took the book before the railroad men, but I got a book like this.

The Chairman. Like that?

Mr. Watson. Yes; I read a book like that.

Mr. Worthington. I do not care to ask anything further.

The Chairman. Read the title of that book, please.

Mr. Watson. No: there is "United States, respondent."

The Chairman. Is that all that is on the title page?

Mr. Watson. No: there is "United States Commerce Court."

The Chairman. Give it to me, and I will read it so that there will be no mistake about it. I will ask the reporter to take it down as I read it.

The chairman read the title page of the book referred to, and the same is as follows:

UNITED STATES COMMERCE COURT.

Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., petitioner, against United States, respondent.

Term, --, 1911. No. -PETITION AND EXHIBITS.

E. H. Boles, Solicitor for Petitioner, 143 Liberty Street, New York, N. Y.

JOHN G. JOHNSON, FRANK H. PLATT, EVERETT WARREN, Counsel.

Counsel.

Stillman Appellate Printing Co., 51 Broad Street, N. Y.

The Chairman. That is the title page of the pamphlet about which Mr. Worthington has interrogated you?

Mr. Worthington has interrogated you?

Mr. Norris. Is that all?

Mr. Worthington. Yes, sir.

Mr. Norris. I want to see the book. Will you hand it to me, please. (The book referred to was handed to Mr. Norris.)

Mr. Norris. Mr. Watson, this pamphlet that you exhibit, of which the chairman has just read the title, is the other one of the three books that you were testifying about yesterday, is it?

Mr. Watson. Yes; I think so; because the back part of this book contains the information that I had. This $1.40—

Mr. Norris. Then you were mistaken yesterday in your testimony when you testified that the third book, as you called it, was another brief?

Mr. Watson. Well, maybe I was, if I called it a brief.

Mr. Norris. Well, you did yesterday.

Mr. Watson. Then it was a mistake, because I think it was that book.

Mr. Norris. That is it?

when you testified that the third book, as you called if, was another brief?

Mr. Warson. Well, maybe I was, if I called it a brief.

Mr. Norgis. Well, you did yesterday.

Mr. Norgis. Then it was a mistake, because I think it was that book.

Mr. Norgis. Then it was a copy of that book.

Mr. Norgis. Then it is?

Mr. Warson. I think it was a copy of that book.

Mr. Norgis. You think it was either this or a copy of it?

Mr. Warson. Oh, it was not that one. It could not be.

Mr. Warson. Oh, it was not that one. It could not be.

Mr. Warson. Oh, it was not that one. It could not be.

Mr. Warson. Oh, it was not that one. It could not be.

Mr. Warson. Oh, it was not that one. It could not be.

Mr. Warson. Oh, it was not that one. It could not be.

Mr. Warson. The back part of it—

Mr. Warson. The back part of it—

Mr. Warson. Oh, in.

Mr. Normis. The back part of the order?

Mr. Warson. Oh, in.

Mr. Warson. Before the order. I think it is about the last paragraph of the page?

Mr. Warson. Before the order. I think it is about the last paragraph is "And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be served upon each of the parties to said case." Is that it?

Mr. Warson. Well, I can not tell you right.—

Mr. Normis. That last paragraph is: "And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be served upon each of the parties to said case." Is that it?

Mr. Warson. No; there is a place where it says $1.40 for prepared sizes and another rate for pea and another rate for pea and another rate for buckwheat coal.

Mr. Warson. That is what I read yesterday, is it not, out of the bird.

Mr. Warson. The same thing?

Mr. Warson. His is in a different—

Mr. Normis. The same thing?

Mr. Warson. His is in a different—

Mr. Normis. The same thing?

Mr. Warson. That is what I read yesterday, is if not, out of the bird.

Mr. Warson. And some men that were connected with these roads that I had in my possession for the various reasons. Pirit, because it ames some engineers that I knew.

Mr. Warson. And some men that were connected

Mr. Norris. Did you not testify yesterday that what you wanted to get was the record of the case before the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. Warson, Yes give the way and I would be a second of the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. Warson. Yes, sir; it was; and I wanted to get the disposition that they had made of that case. I wanted to get it.
Mr. Norris. All right. You evidently told Judge Archbald that because you did not know just where you could get this record, did because you did not know just where you could get this record, did you?

Mr. Watson. No, sir.
Mr. Norris. You were hunting for it?
Mr. Watson. No, sir; I did not know.
Mr. Norris. You did not know?
Mr. Watson. No, sir.
Mr. Norris. Then I presume you asked Judge Archbald where you could get it, did you not?

Mr. Watson. It is more than likely that I did.
Mr. Norris. Did not Judge Archbald tell you that the place to get the record, the Interstate Commerce Commission in that case, was to go to the Interstate Commerce Commission and not to the Commerce Court? Did he not tell you that?

Mr. Watson. I have an indistinct recollection that we did talk about some commission or some other office. This was Saturday afternoon—

Mr. Warson. I have an indistinct recollection that we did talk about some commission or some other office. This was Saturday afternoon—
Mr. Norris. At that time had you studied the law enough to know that there was such a thing as the Interstate Commerce Commission?
Mr. Warson. Yes; I knew of it. I knew about the Sherman law.
Mr. Norris. When he told you that was the place to get their records, what did you say to him?
Mr. Warson. I don't know.
Mr. Norris. That is all.
Mr. Warson. I don't know what I said.
The Chairman. Mr. Worthington, the committee desires that those three pamphlets—
Mr. Norris. I have another question about this.
The Chairman. But let me finish this statement.
Mr. Norris. Certainly; but I want to finish the examination.
The Chairman. Referring to those three pamphlets or documents that have been referred to, numbered 49, the three several pamphlets or documents that have been read in the testimony, the committee desires that those papers be left in the custody of the committee, but not to be incorporated into the record, as it would unnecessarily encumber the record. The committee desires to have them left with it, so that it may make such use as it desires of the pamphlets. You do not desire to have them printed in the record?
Mr. Worthington. Not at all.
Mr. Norris. How did you happen to have your memory refreshed since you have been on the witness stand in regard to this other exhibit that you have identified this morning?
Mr. Warson. It was shown to me. They handed me the book and I read it.
Mr. Norris. Who showed it to you?
Mr. Warson. Mr. Worthington.
Mr. Norris. Who showed it to you?
Mr. Warson. Mr. Worthington.
Mr. Norris. You recognized it as being a copy of the other pamphlet?
Mr. Warson. I recognized that last part of that book as being contained in a book that I had read, and I—
Mr. Norris. You recognized that last part of that book as being contained in a book that I had read, and I—
Mr. Norris. You found that, did you?

Mr. Norris. It is not a brief, though. I do not suppose he told your

Mr. Norris. It is not a brief, though. I do not suppose he told you that.

Mr. Watson. Not a brief, but a petition; and he opened it at that point where the petition occurs, right there [indicating].

Mr. Norris. That is not anywhere near the page you identified.

Mr. Watson. No, sir.

Mr. Norris. You located that there yourself?

Mr. Watson. I did. I just turned it over and looked at the back part of it, because I recall that is where it was that I read that.

Mr. Norris. That is all.

Mr. Worthington. I handed that to you right across the table here, did I not?

Mr. Watson. Yes, sir; just here.

The Chairman. The Chair may say, right in this connection, that last night Mr. Worthington called the attention of the Chair to this matter, and said that he did not have that pamphlet with him, but would probably want to get it and interrogate Mr. Watson with reference to it. I told him it would be quite proper for him to do so; to show it to Mr. Watson when he brought it, and that then Mr. Watson could resume the stand and answer his questions with respect to it.

Now, Mr. Watson, you wrote a letter to Truesdale and Loomis saying that you would be ready to meet him on this coal-property deal at any time, on an hour's notice, did you not?

Mr. Watson. Well, I don't know that I said an hour.

The Chairman. The letter was here vesterday; yes, sir. That is the dated October 2?

Mr. Warson. The letter was here yesterday; yes, sir. That is the letter.

The Chairman. Why did you write that letter telling them that you would be ready to see them at an hour's notice before you came down to Washington and got this information, which you say you came down here and got, informing you as to the procedure before the Interstate Commerce Commission and the procedure in the Commerce Court? In other words, Mr. Watson, to be perfectly frank about it, that letter would seem to indicate that you had all the information that you wanted in dealing with Truesdale and Loomis in respect to this matter; and your testimony now seems to be that you wanted to inform yourself fully as to the law governing the procedure in the Interstate Commerce matter and the procedure in the Commerce Court before you had the interview with them. It appears to me that there may be a possible discrepancy there in your testimony, and I desire you to explain it.

Mr. Watson. The data I had to study this case on was prepared in

Mr. Warson. The data I had to study this case on was prepared in typewritten form—that is, the information, the reductions that they wanted—and I think possibly some expression of the *ommerce Commission was incorporated in this notice.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think I have made myself clear.
Mr. WATSON. Yes; you did, because I wanted to get the data—
The CHAIRMAN. Very well; proceed.

Mr. Warson. In this meeting, or at this session yesterday, the question was asked me by some one if Mr. Pryor did not prepare a paper. There was a paper prepared by some one that was given to me by Mr. Boland, Mr. W. P. Boland, together with the other papers, and that paper contained what we claimed, and all that we wanted, and the things they had done which we said were against the law; and that the Interstate Commerce Commission had expressed itself on it. At that time I am quite sure that W. P. Boland, or it may have been C. G. Boland, on the morning that I went down to Washington, called my attention to this case and asked me if I could not get those papers to be ready if we had a meeting. That is the reason, or one of the reasons, I came to Washington. We did not have all the data that is in this book. I have been thinking this matter over, and this meeting was discussed for some weeks, or a week or so after I had met Mr. Truesdale, about some way of getting another meeting or another hearing. I am now hazy on that. I do not recall just what we did in relation to these books, but there was sometaing done there, and maybe that may be the second letter—the letter of the 2d. It may have been that the meeting was held before the 2d, but my recollection is now that it was not. Understand me. Mr. Boland and myself went over all of these papers after Mr. Loomis had gone away, and Mr. Truesdale; and there was to be an effort made to get Mr. Truesdale or Mr. Loomis to take the case up and go over it again with some data that we thought we had. That was the very day that they were there, or the day after; and Mr. Phillips was talking about it to some one—at least it was reported so. We went into some discussion about that. I do not recall what we did; but then, when that fell through, I left the case, and it was about a week, I judge, that we were working on it. Or it may be that I used those books in that last—

The CHAIRMAN, Did not Loomis tell you that he had turned down the proposition?

Mr. WATSON. I don't think there was anything said like "turning down." I think they said: "We can not consider it—we won't consider it in this shape."

The CHAIRMAN. He rejected it, then?

Mr. WATSON (continuing). "He is asking too much money," or some such thing.

The CHAIRMAN. He rejected in the is asking too much more Mr. Watson (continuing). "He is asking too much more such thing.

The CHAIRMAN. I was using a vulgarism which is very common, "turned down," thinking you would understand that perhaps quite as well as more refined language. I will now adopt another phrase. Then, did he inform you that the proposition to buy that coal property was rejected?

Mr. Watson. Well, it would not be that; I don't know that he said that Mr. Warson. Well, it would not be that; I don't know that he said that.

The Chairman. Then did he say, either in the common vernacular of the streets that the proposition was "turned down," or in the refined language of the court room or ball room that it was rejected, or language of equivalent import to either one of these expressions that I have used? You can take your choice as to which one.

Mr. Warson. Oh, he would not take the property; that is all. He did not take it. He said they would not.

The Chairman. He said they would not take the property?

Mr. Warson. That is what he said.

The Chairman. You prefer that language, which is quite satisfactory to the chairman.

did not take if. He said they would not take the property?

Mr. WATSON. That is what he said.

The CHAIRMAN. You prefer that language, which is quite satisfactory to the chairman.

Mr. WATSON. I do not know his exact language; I could not tell you that; but I know that is what it amounted to.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever have any other conference with Mr. Truesdale?

Mr. WATSON. I did not. I tried to, but did not.

The CHAIRMAN. I must confess, Mr. Watson, that you have not made perfectly clear to me your answer to the question that I asked a while ago, and I beg to repeat it, perhaps in a little different form. On October 2 you wrote the letter which has been read into the testimony, and is now known as "Exhibit 86."

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. In this letter to Mr. Loomis to which I have just referred, in which you seek a conference with Loomis and Truesdale, you wind up with this sentence:

"If you will kindly advise me, either by wire or letter, I will hold myself in readiness to meet you on a few hours' notice."

You were ready, then, to meet them and go over the matter of the trade for this coal property on October 2? This letter imports that you were ready to meet them and to discuss that matter on an hour's notice. Mr. Worthington. A few hours' notice.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. A few hours' notice.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. A few hours' notice?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. On a few hours' notice?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Why was it necessary, then, for you afterwards to come to Washington to get this information that you got from the three pamphlets that you have referred to after your conference in Washington with Judge Archbaid?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Why as it necessary, then, for you afterwards to come to Washington to get this information that you got from the three pamphlets that you have referred to after your conference in Washington with which we not washington to get this information that you got from the three pamphlets that you have referred to after your conference in Washington,

Mr. Watson. Mr. Boland gave it to me. I do not know who prepared it.

The Chairman. Which one of the Bolands?

Mr. Watson. Mr. W. P. Boland here. It was in with all the papers that he gave me. The leases and all the other things were together.

The Chairman. Then you afterwards concluded, after having written this letter of October 2, that you wanted further information about the law governing the Commerce Commission and the Commerce Court, did you?

Mr. Warson. It was about what they had done that I wanted to get law governing the Commerce Commission and the Commerce Court, did you?

Mr. Watson. It was about what they had done that I wanted to get information.

The Chairman. Did you not say something yesterday to the effect that you wanted to be informed as to the law?

Mr. Watson. About the appealing?

The Chairman. Yes.

Mr. Watson. And the court—yes; I knew nothing about it at all.

The Chairman. Did it occur to you after October 2, when you had written that letter, that you wanted further data, or that you wanted further legal information?

Mr. Watson. Oh, it was the data that we wanted.

The Chairman. You did not want any further legal information?

Mr. Watson. Well, we all want further legal information, but then I did not want—

The Chairman. I am not asking you now about generalities.

Mr. Watson. But I do not know whether I was hunting for it in that particular case. I do not think I was.

The Chairman. I am asking you whether, in your own mind, you came down to Washington here for further legal information as to the Commerce Court? You said, I believe, yesterday, that you did not know the law about the Commerce Court and you knew very little about the Commerce Commission.

Mr. Watson. Yes.

The Chairman. And did you not say in substance that you wanted to come down here and learn about the law and the procedure in those two tribunals? Did you not recall saying it, but it was perhaps the fact that I did want to know something about it.

The Chairman. Was that your object—to get this information as to the law and the procedure in these tribunals, or was it to get data?

Mr. Watson. It was to get data and information and the record—what I wanted to see.

The Chairman. What record?

Mr. Watson. The record of this commission—what they had done. I wanted to get their findings.

The Chairman. In what case?

Mr. Watson. In this Meeker case, because that is a case right in our immediate neighborhood—the same freight rates, the same zone.

The Chairman. How long before that had you heard of the Meeker case?

Mr. Watson.

immediate neighborhood—the same freight rates, the same zone.

The CHAIRMAN. How long before that had you heard of the Meeker case?

Mr. WATSON. Possibly a week or so we had been talking about it, the Bolands and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. And you could not get the record in the Meeker case without making your trip to Washington?

Mr. WATSON. Well, I do not know that we thought of going to Washington—I do not know that I could; I might have gotten it by writing for it, but I did not know that.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not know that you could write down here?

Mr. WATSON. Oh, I knew that I could in a general way, but I did not know how to get it; that is it; and they did not know how to get it; that is it; and they did not know how to get it; that is it; and they did not know how to get it; that is ti; and they did not know how to get it; that is just what I am trying to say now—that it may possibly have been that when I came to Washington for this data, it was for the purpose of going back again and asking for another meeting with Truesdale.

The CHAIRMAN. Another meeting with Truesdale?

Mr. WATSON. Yes. Now, after this came out yesterday, I did not know but what that might be so. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. It occurs to you now that possibly you had two conferences or meetings?

Mr. WATSON. I did not have a second conference; I know that, I never met them again.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever write any letter to either Loomis or Truesdale inviting them to a second conference?

Mr. WATSON. No: I did not. The only business I ever had was, perhaps, with Mr. Phillips, trying to get another meeting, and I did do that. I recall that.

The CHAIRMAN. You never made any effort to have the second meeting?

Mr. WATSON. Not directly to Mr. Truesdale. Mr. Phillips was the that. I recall that.

The CHAIRMAN. You never made any effort to have the second meeting?

Mr. WATSON. Not directly to Mr. Truesdale. Mr. Phillips was the superintendent of the coal department—of the coal-producing end—and I went to him.

The CHAIRMAN. Phillips would have had no power to overrule Truesdale, would he?

Mr. WATSON. No; but he could ask him to have another hearing, and I think he does that very frequently.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, since yesterday I have found what purports to be the telegram that the witness said he sent to Judge Archbald from Philadelphia when he was on his way down here. I should like to show it to him.

The CHAIRMAN. One minute, Mr. Worthington.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I thought you were through, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you use this information that you got about the Meeker case in your conversation with Phillips, or did you use it in your conversation or conference with Truesdale and Loomis?

Mr. WATSON. That I do not know. I do not remember about using that book or those books. I do not think I ever had them before Loomis. The CHAIRMAN. You may have used that information in your conference or conversation with Phillips and not with Truesdale and Loomis?

Mr. WATSON. No; I think I called Mr. Phillip's attention to this freight rate.

Loomis?

Mr. Watson. No: I think I called Mr. Phillip's attention to this freight rate. Mr. Truesdale denied the rate.

The Charman. I think you said, in substance, yesterday, that you used that information which you got in Washington from those pamphlets and otherwise in your hour and a half conference with Truesdale and Loomis.

Mr. Watson. I think I did. I said that yesterday, but I am not sure about it.

The Charman. Now, Mr. Worthington, you may show the witness the telegram you have referred to.

Mr. Norris. Mr. Chairman, before he does that I should like to ask the witness a few questions.

The Chairman. Certainly.
Mr. Norris. You were sure of it yesterday, were you not, Mr. Watson?
Mr. Watson. I don't know how sure; maybe.
Mr. Norris. You testified as though you were sure of it.
Mr. Norris. You testified as though you were sure of it.
Mr. Watson. I did.
Mr. Norris. When did you change your mind?
Mr. Watson. Through the night I have been thinking this matter over, and I am now uncertain as to the meetings we had.
Mr. Norris. Do you not remember that yesterday I called your attention to those briefs and asked you what particular part of them you used in that conference, and you pointed out the particular paragraph that you used, and that was the basis of your argument before Truesdale?
Mr. Watson. The contents of that paragraph was. I never said I dale?

Mr. Watson. The contents of that paragraph was. I never said I had those books before Truesdale.

Mr. Norris. No; you did not say you took the books there; but you based your argument on the information that you got out of that pamphlet.

Mr. Watson. That is my thought now. That is what I think now. Mr. Norris. You believe that now, do you?

Mr. Watson. Yes; but I may be mistaken about it.

Mr. Norris. You may be mistaken?

Mr. Watson. And it may have been in the papers that Mr. Boland gave me.

Mr. Watson. Yes; but I may be mistaken about it.

Mr. Norris. You may be mistaken?

Mr. Watson. And it may have been in the papers that Mr. Boland gave me.

Mr. Norris. Yes; and it may be, then, that you had never seen those pamphlets when you had that conference?

Mr. Watson. If, as has been suggested by some one, I went there before I came to Washington, I had never seen them.

Mr. Norris. Is it not true that since you testified yesterday you have learned from other sources that the probabilities are that you came to Washington after that conference rather than before it?

Mr. Watson. I have not talked to a soul about this.

Mr. Norris. I have not asked you that.

Mr. Watson. It is all my own idea.

Mr. Norris. I have not asked you if you have talked to anybody.

Mr. Watson. You said "did I learn."

Mr. Norris. I have not earn it by reading, and I have not learned it by talking. It has come out of my mind, that is all.

Mr. Norris. Then you have not learned it; you have just thought about it yourself?

Mr. Watson. A doubt may arise.

Mr. Norris. Do you want us to believe now that you came to Washington and got those three pamphlets for the purpose of arming yourself and equipping yourself for the contest that you were to have with those raliroad officials in Scranton? Do you want us to believe that or not?

Mr. Watson. I did; certainly. I came here to get information, and that was the information I took back.

Mr. Norris. It is your impression now that that is the way it occurred, is it, and your belief?

Mr. Watson. Yes; I think so.

Mr. Norris. Before the same officials?

Mr. Norris. Before the same officials?

Mr. Norris. Before the same officials?

Mr. Norris. And then went home without it? You did not get it, did you?

Mr. Watson. Yes.

Mr. Norris. And then went home without it? You did not get it, did you?

Mr. Watson. Well, I think I had it. I am not sure. I think I did have it.

Mr. Watson. Yes.
Mr. Norris. And then went home without it? You did not get it, did you?
Mr. Watson. Well, I think I had it. I am not sure. I think I did have it.
Mr. Norris. Did you have anything besides those three pamphlets?
Mr. Watson. I think so.
Mr. Norris. Let us have that information, then. Yesterday you only had those three pamphlets.
Mr. Watson. Well, I don't know.
Mr. Norris. Did you have four pamphlets?
Mr. Watson. No; I don't know. I don't think so. Whatever I had Mr. Boland has now, except these two books.
Mr. Norris. Your experience had been very limited in practicing before the Commerce Court and before the Interstate Commerce Commission?
Mr. Watson. I never had been in it.
Mr. Norris. You had never been in either one of them?
Mr. Watson. No.
Mr. Norris. And that is the reason why you took this course to get information that, if you had been better posted, you could have obtained otherwise?
Mr. Watson. If I had had time; yes; I could.
Mr. Norris. In this rate case that you were coming down here to Washington to get information about there was another attorney representing Mr. Boland by the name of Reynolds, was there not?
Mr. Watson. Yes, sir.
Mr. Norris. Does he live in Scranton?
Mr. Watson. Yes, sir.
Mr. Norris. Mr. Reynolds is rather an expert on the rate business, is he not?
Mr. Watson. I do not know about that. I know he has those kind of Mr. Norris. Mr. Rejudence is he not?

Mr. Watson. I do not know about that. I know he has those kind of cases some. I have heard that since then.

Mr. Norris. He practices before the Interstate Commerce Commission and before the Commerce Court, does he not?

and before the Commerce Court, does he not?

Mr. Watson. I think he does.
Mr. Norris. And he was in that case with you?
Mr. Watson. No. I was not to say anything to Mr. Reynolds.

Mr. Norris, What is your answer?
Mr. Watson. I was not to talk to Mr. Reynolds about this case.
Mr. Norris. You knew he was in the same case?
Mr. Watson. I knew that Mr. Reynolds had tried one branch of that case, but the settlement of the case with the Lackawanna Railroad was another matter.
Mr. Norris. I understand that; but in order to make that settlement advantageous to your clients you wanted to get information from the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. Watson, Yes.
Mr. Norris. Why did you not go to Reynolds, who was right there in Scranton, and was an expert in that line, and get that information?
Mr. Watson. Because I had been told by Mr. Boland that Mr. Reynolds did not want anything to do with the settlement; that he would not settle the case; and therefore he asked me to go into the settlement.

would not settle the case; and therefore he asked me to go into the settlement.

Mr. Norris. Why would not Reynolds settle the case?

Mr. Warson. That I do not know.

Mr. Norris. You could have gotten information, probably, from Mr. Reynolds, in regard to the Meeker case, without intimating that you were in this case with him, had you wanted to, could you not?

Mr. Warson. Well, I might, but I did not think that would be exactly fair, to go to a man's office—

Mr. Norris. Would it not have been fair to have gone to any attorney's effice who practiced in that court, and ask him, instead of wiring down to Judge Archbald and then coming clear to Washington? It would not have been unfair to go to a man that was right there in town and ask him how to get a record from the Interstate Commerce Commission, would it?

Mr. Warson. Well, I see that I could have done that.

Mr. Norris. You could have done that?

Mr. Warson. Yes. It did not occur to me. In my conversation with these people it did not occur to me. I think they desired me to come here and get it. My recollection is that we expected that meeting on Monday; that is what I remember now; and if not, we knew that Mr. Loomis came there on Monday, and I expected to meet Mr. Loomis again, in any event.

Mr. Norris. So your coming down here would fit either one of those circumstances?

Mr. Warson. The matter of fact was that we knew the meeting would be on Monday next, or Tuesday: we knew that. He always comes on Monday or Tuesday. Everyone knew that.

Mr. Worthington. You say "He always comes Monday or Tuesday." Whom do you mean?

Mr. Warson. Mr. Loomis. He comes up early in the week when he does come up.

Mr. Norris. All right.

Mr. Watsox. Mr. Loomis. He comes up early in the week when he does come up.

Mr. Norris. All right.

Mr. Floyd. I want to ask you a question now. If I understood you on yesterday, Mr. Watson, in speaking of your first interview in the office of Judge Archbald, you said that you were so well acquainted with him that if you had wanted to ask him any opinion about legal matters you would not have hesitated to do so?

Mr. Watsox. I do; I say that now.

Mr. Floyd. Is it not a fact that after these rallroad attorneys had turned you down and refused your settlement you made that trip to Washington to see Judge Archbald to get his advice or assistance in getting another interview with the railroad people?

Mr. Watsox. No; I did not.

Mr. Floyd. You say that is not a fact?

Mr. Watsox. I did not. I did not speak to him about that branch of it, I am sure.

Mr. WATSON. I did not. I did not speak to him about that branch of it, I am sure.

Mr. FLOYD. If you would not have hesitated or thought there was anything wrong in asking his advice, why did you not do so?

Mr. WATSON. Well, I don't know. When I said I did not mind asking his advice, that was about the preliminaries of a case. But if this had gotten to a place where the question would indicate that it had, I do not think it would have been proper for me to talk to him about it, and I did not think then it would be, if I thought about it at all; but I don't think I thought about it.

Mr. FLOYD. That is all.

Mr. Norris. If you had your conference with Truesdale and the other railroad officials before coming to Washington, then what was the reason that you sent the telegram to Judge Archbald?

Mr. WATSON. I think that was suggested by C. G. Boland. I am not sure. He was in the office, and we had to get somebody that we could be sure of on Saturday, and he either suggested the name of Archbald or I did, and we prepared the telegram.

Mr. Norris. All right. Now, if you had had your conference before coming here, then what was the hurry of getting this record from Washington? You had made no arrangements to use the information and had fixed no date for another meeting?

Mr. WATSON. The only answer I can make to that would be that Mr. Loomis came there on Mondays, and if, as you say, the meeting had been held, I wanted to see him as early as I could on Monday.

Mr. Norris. Yes; but Archbald did not come there with Loomis always?

Mr. WATSON. No; Archbald was not there at all.

Mr. Norris. I do not mean Archbald; I mean Truesdale.

Mr. Norris. You did not care to see the president?

Mr. WATSON. Well, I did want to see him; yes.

Loomis.

Mr. Norris. You did not care to see the president?

Mr. Watson. Well, I did want to see him; yes.

Mr. Norris. But you were after Loomis?

Mr. Watson. But Mr. Loomis was the coal man.

Mr. Norris. Yes. You were expecting, however, to make arrangements for a future meeting? You talked that over after the failure of this other meeting for several days, did you not?

Mr. Watson. I think so.

Mr. Norris. And that would imply that you were going to fix a date for a meeting. When you came to Washington you had not fixed that date, had you? Mr. Norms. And that would be a substituted by the for a meeting. When you came to Washington you had not fixed that date, had you?

Mr. Watson. I think possibly I had talked with Mr.—

Mr. Norms. Mr. Boland?

Mr. Watson. No: Mr. Phillips—about when Mr. Loomis would come again. But, now, that is not my recollection.

Mr. Norms. I understand that; but you have been saying that that might be true.

might be true.

Mr. Warson. I know it was true afterwards. I know we did try to get Mr. Loomis afterwards, after that meeting. Now, then, that is all get Mr. Loomis afterwards, after that meeting. Now, then, that is all that I can say.

Mr. Norris. But you gave as a reason for hurrying in your trip, and coming down here on Saturday rather than spending a postage stamp and getting this record without the expenditure of money, that you were crowded for time, and that you had to have that information by the next Monday, when that meeting came on. Now, if it turns out—

Mr. Warson. That is my recollection now, that that is what we talked about.

Mr. Norris. I understand: but you say possibly that was not true.

Mr. Norris. I understand; but you say possibly that was not true. If it is not true, if it develops that that meeting had already been held when you came to Washington, then I want you to explain to the committee what was the necessity of the great hurry and the wiring to Archbald and making a trip on Saturday, when you could just as well have taken your time to it and gotten it by mail; or if you had had to come down for it, you could have taken your time and come on Monday, when the court would be in session, if it was from the court that you had to get your information?

Mr. WATSON. I think I came here at the request of Mr. C. G. Boland. Mr. Norris. You know about that, do you not?

Mr. WATSON. No. I think he asked me to go that particular day. Mr. Norris. That particular day?

Mr. Norris. That particular day?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. What was the cause of the hurry?

Mr. WATSON. Something that had arisen in the case that we were talking about there in the office. Just the detail of it I can not give you.

you.

Mr. Norris. In looking back over it now, you know you could have talked to Reynolds and could have gotten the information that you came to Washington for and did not get, do you not?

Mr. Watson. It could have been gotten, perhaps. I do not know that he would give it to us. I think he was not pleased with the settlement—with the effort to settle.

Mr. Norris. That is all,

Mr. Webb. Did Judge Archbald tell you that he was trying to help settle this case?

Mr. WEBS. Did Judge Archbaid tell you that he was trying to help settle this case?

Mr. Warson. I do not think he did. I do not think he ever told me that he was trying to help settle it.

Mr. WEBS. Do you know that he did or did not, Mr. Watson?

Mr. Warson. Well, I don't know. I did know that he was friendly with the Bolond's

Mr. Webb. Do you know that he did or did not, Mr. Watson?
Mr. Warson. Well, I don't know. I did know that he was friendly with the Bolands.
Mr. Webb. Yes; but that does not answer the question.
Mr. Watson. But I do not think he told me—
Mr. Webb. Here you were associated with the judge right much with reference to this matter. Can you tell us whether he was trying to help you settle it or not?
Mr. Watson. Well, if he was, I never saw anything beyond perhaps asking for the appointment; asking Mr. Loomis to see me.
Mr. Webb. "Perhaps?"
Mr. Watson. Well, that is all.
Mr. Webb. Did you hear this letter read here a while ago, beginning "My dear Christy"?
Mr. Watson. I do not know anything about that letter, and I never saw it until now; until I heard it read here.
Mr. Webb. Since you have heard it read, what interest do you think the judge had in it?
Mr. Watson. That would be expressing an opinion on it. I do not know what was in his mind; but the way that letter reads, it would read as if he had been interested and that he was regretting that he had failed.

know what was in his mind; but the way that letter reads, it would read as if he had been interested and that he was regretting that he had failed.

Mr. Webb. That is just the impression it makes on my mind, too. Mr. Watson. Let me see the letter, please.

Mr. Webb. Yes; of course. [Handing letter to Mr. Watson.]

Mr. Watson (after examining letter). From that letter standing alone I would say that he was trying to get a settlement—it would seem to me so—and that he regretted that he could not.

Mr. Webb. And that was written in November, was it not?

Mr. Watson. That is what it says.

Mr. Worthington. November 13.

Mr. Webb. November 13. If he was interested in the settlement of this case, with all your association with him, you never found it out?

Mr. Watson. He never had talked with me about this case.

Mr. Webb. I say if he was interested in the settlement of it, as indicated in that letter, you never found it out?

Mr. Watson. I won't say that, because I say that Judge Archbald wrote or talked to Loomis, and that may be the basis of our meeting. Now, that would show, maybe, an interest for the Bolands; I don't know. It would be, maybe, for me, in order to get to Mr. Loomis, and that would indicate that he had something. But so far as our talking about the case, I didn't see much of him, and so I am sure I didn't talk with him.

Mr. Webb. You are sure you did not talk with the judge?

Mr. Watson. Yes. I didn't see him much. He was away from Scranton.

Mr. Webb. You and the judge had had some conversation and under-

Mr. WATSON. 1es. I didn't see that Scranton.

Mr. WEBB. You and the judge had had some conversation and understanding about the settlement of this case, because you talked about it in his office, and he had introduced you to Loomis, or, rather, said he was going to write Loomis for you. Now, when you came down here to Washington and got here about noon—by the way, did you take lunch with him?

Mr. WATSON. No; I think I had my lunch on the train. I am not cure you take lunch with him?

Mr. Watson. No; I think I had my lunch on the train. I am not sure.

Mr. Watson. No. I went back too early.

Mr. Watson. I do you mean to say that you never did tell him your mission in getting these records, what you never did tell him your mission in getting these records, what you were going to do next Monday or Tuesday when you met Truesdale and Loomis?

Mr. Watson. I won't say that I didn't talk to him. I may have said something of that kind. I presume I did.

Mr. Webb. What did you say?

Mr. Watson. I told him what I was down there for—that I was down to get information in relation to this case.

Mr. Webb. What did you say to him? Is that all you said?

Mr. Watson. Well, I can not tell you.

Mr. Watson. Well, I can not tell you.

Mr. Watson. I don't think he did.

Mr. Watson. I don't think he did.

Mr. Watson. I don't think he did. I don't think there was any advice to be given, except the information that I wanted in relation to the matter here.

Mr. Webb. You had to come down here to get that information, when

Mr. Webb. You had to come down here to get that information, when you could have sent Boland, your client, across the street to his other lawyer and gotten it from Mr. Reynolds; and you knew that you could. Mr. Watsox. There were two Bolands.
Mr. Webb. There were two Bolands; but you represented both of them, did you not?

Mr. Watson. Yes; I represented the Marian Coal Co.
Mr. Webb. If you had wanted this information contained in this pamphlet or record, you could have sent just across the street to Mr.
Reynolds by one of your clients and got all you wanted, because you know Mr. Reynolds is more or less of an expert and keeps up with the Interstate Commerce Commission decisions as well as the Commerce Court decisions, do you not?

Mr. Watson. I did not know Mr. Reynolds was an expert, and so—Mr. Webb. You knew, though, that he could have given you all the information you wanted about this particular case, did you not?
Mr. Watson. I did not know it; no. I do know now that Mr.
Reynolds had considerable to do with this case; but at that time I did not know very much about it. In fact, they had two lawyers. Mr.
Donnelly was the lawyer that I knew about, and he was in the culmdump case, and I talked with Mr. Donnelly several times, but I do not recall ever speaking to Reynolds. Up to the present moment I never spoke to Reynolds about this case.
Mr. Webb. I imagine this is the largest fee you ever worked for its dump case, and I talked with Mr. Donnelly several times, but I do not recall ever speaking to Reynolds. Up to the present moment I never spoke to Reynolds about this case.

Mr. Webb. I imagine this is the largest fee you ever worked for; is it not?

Mr. Webb. I imagine this is the largest fee you ever worked for; is it not?

Mr. Webb. Yes.

Mr. Watson. What—$5,000?

Mr. Webb. Yes.

Mr. Watson. Well, I think not. I think not.

Mr. Webb. You have had larger fees than that?

Mr. Watson. I have had cases that I have gotten more money out of; you can call them fees.

Mr. Webb. Have you had many cases of that sort?

Mr. Watson. I say I have had them that I have gotten more money out of it.

Mr. Webb. More than $5,000?

Mr. Watson. Yes.

Mr. Webb. More than $5,000?

Mr. Watson. Yes.

Mr. Webb. Have you had any other case that involved a fee of $5,000?

Mr. Watson. Well, I have had matters in which I was interested in a way, in the passing of properties, where I have gotten more.

Mr. Webb. More than $5,000 fees?

Mr. Watson. Yes; I did that in cases where I was not known at all, the Delaware & Hudson cases. I was not known in those, and I got more than $5,000 on the transfer of property. Oh, I have managed to keep the wolf from the door; and while I do not presume to be brilliant, or an expert on any point, I have tried to do what my hands have found to do, and to do it honestly.

Mr. Webb. I want to ask you if you told Mr. Boland. when he employed you, that you could "produce the goods." I never boasted of what I could do. I know I did not.

Mr. Webb. You never thought that?

Mr. Watson. I never talked ti—"produce the goods." I never boasted of what I could do. I know I did not.

Mr. Webb. I ask you if you did not tell him that you could "produce the goods." I never boasted of what I could do. I know I did not.

Mr. Webb. I ask you if you did not tell him that you could "produce the goods." I never boasted of what I could aloue the limit hat you could "produce the goods." I never boasted of what I could do. I know I claimed to have any with these people, except Mr. Phillips or some of those.

Mr. Webr. You evidently thought you could effect a settlement, because you agreed to take $5,000 and try it.

Mr. Warson. I did agree to try it for $5,000. I will do it tomorrow, the same thing. I would if I were well. I would not do it now in my condition, but if I were well. I would not do it now in my condition, but if I were well I would do it-in the common language, "produce the goods"?

Mr. Warson. I did think I could do it; yes; or I would not have gone working around for a month or two if I had not thought so.

Mr. Norris. Which one of the Bolands paid you $50?

Mr. Norris. Which one of the Bolands paid you $50?

Mr. Norris. When did he pay it to you?

Mr. Natson. It was the day that I went to Stroudsburg; that is, the day before I came here.

Mr. Norris. The day before you came to Washington?

Mr. Warson. Yes; the dhy the telegram was sent. The telegram had been sent out long before.

Mr. Norris. The same day the telegram was sent?

Mr. Norris. I would like to know, if you know. Was it a check, or was it a draft, or was it money?

Mr. Norris. Currency?

Mr. Norris. Currency?

Mr. Norris. Currency?

Mr. Narson. Yes.

Mr. Watson. My recollection of the matter is that it was money—in currency.

Mr. Norris. Currency?

Mr. Watson. Yes.

Mr. Norris. Do you remember the bills?

Mr. Watson. I do not. I don't remember that.

Mr. Norris. You know it was $50?

Mr. Norris. You know it was $50?

Mr. Norris. Who was present when he gave it to you besides you and Mr. Boland?

Mr. Watson. Well, I don't remember, unless W. P. Boland was there.

Mr. Norris. Was he there?

Mr. Norris. Did you give him a receipt for the money?

Mr. Norris. Did you give him a receipt for the money?

Mr. Norris. Do you know whether you did or not?

Mr. Norris. Do you know whether you did or not?

Mr. Norris. Do you know whether you did or not?

Mr. Watson. I do not; but I gave it to him if he asked me, and I do not know whether he asked me or not. I don't know that. I know he handed me that money, and we had sent the telegram some hours before, and I am sure it was money, because I would perhaps remember if it had been a check and I had gone out to get the money on it.

Mr. Webb. That is all, Mr. Worthington.

Mr. Worthington. Now, will you look at this telegram, Mr. Watson, and tell me whether that is the telegram you sent Judge Archbald when you were on your way to Washington?

Mr. Watson (after examining telegram). Well, it seems as if it would fit. I presume it is.

Mr. Floyd. Will you read it, please?

Mr. Worthington. Let me read it; Mr. Watson's voice apparently is not in good condition. It is on a Postal Telegraph blank and reads:

PHILADELIPHIA, PA., October 7, 1911.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., October 7, 1911. Hon. R. W. Archbald, Court of Commerce, Washington, D. C.:

Will be at Hotel Raleigh at 1.30. Leave instructions.

G. M. Watson.

The foregoing telegram was marked "Exhibit 89."

Mr. Worthington. There is another thing I want to bring out. I do not know whether it has been noticed by the committee or not, but I think, in justice to the committee as well as to the witness, attention ought to be called to it while he is here. One of these pamphiets that he brought here, and which he says he recollects is one of those that he got here on the 7th of October, is stamped "Filed October 9, 1911." The other is not stamped at all. It does not bear any stamp.

Mr. FLOID. Stamped by whom, how, Mr. Worthington?

Mr. Worthington. It is a printed stamp. I presume—I do not know—it is the stamp of the court. They have a way of stamping papers there when they are filed. I did not myself notice that yesterday, or I would have called attention to it then.

Mr. Webb. Let me see that, please. I do not know whether I catch the point or not. Are you prepared to say you did not get this document on the 6th?

Mr. Warson. No; I know it was not the 6th. I am quite sure it was the 7th when they handed them to me in the building there.

Mr. Worthington. The point I made about that is that he said he got it here on the 7th, and according to the file mark it was not filed in the court until the 9th.

Mr. Webb. I see; that is right. In other words, as I judge it, Mr. Watson, you could not have gotten this document here on the 7th, because it was not filed until the 9th of October.

Mr. Warson. I certainly got that book handed to me in the Commerce Court on the day that I was down here. I know it was on the 7th. It could not have been any other time.

Mr. Webb. I do not know a thing about it except what counsel hands me here. The one he hands me here is an identical copy of the one you say you got, and it seems to have been filed October 9; and, of course, if it was not filed until October 9 you could not have gotten it on October 7.

Mr. Warson. I am sure it is the one I brought down here. The one I brought here is the one I got.

Mr. Warson. I am sure it is the book handed me the books, and that is one of them as nea trouble. It has been around my office, and I have not been there, so I don't know what happened to it. I assume it is the book, the same book.

Mr. Norris. That is the book you took home to your office?

Mr. Watson. I am quite sure it is.

Mr. Norris. And you brought it here with you from your office?

Mr. Watson. I am quite sure of it; yes. I don't know; I have no identification of the book, but I had a book just like that and brought it in here, and I suppose this is it.

Mr. Webb. This is the one you presented here yesterday, because I marked it; I can tell it is.

Mr. Watson. Yes.

Mr. Watson. Yes.

Mr. Webb. Just one more question: When you wired the judge on your way down here, through the Postal Telegraph Co., asking him to meet you at 1.30 at the Raleigh

Mr. Worthington. He does not ask him to meet him, Mr. Chairman; he says. "Leave instructions."

Mr. Webb. Let me see that telegram, please. [After examining telegram.] "Will be at Hotel Raleigh at 1.30; leave instructions." What did you mean by "leave instructions in the Raleigh?

Mr. Webb. But he did meet you at the Raleigh?

Mr. Webb. But he did meet you at the Raleigh?

Mr. Watson. Where I could find him; I think I said—

Mr. Webb. But he did meet you at the Raleigh?

Mr. Watson. He met me, so he did not need to leave the instructions."

Mr. Webb. But he did meet you at the Raleigh?
Mr. Webb. But he did meet you at the Raleigh?
Mr. Watson. He met me, so he did not need to leave the instructions.
Mr. Webb. He did not need to leave the instructions.
Mr. Watson. No; he met me; but if he had been engaged he could have sent a boy there to have told me where I could have found him. I did not know.
Mr. Webb. The instructions you were after, then, were as to where you could find him?
Mr. Watson. Yes.
Mr. Webb. You were determined to see the judge?
Mr. Watson. Yes.
Mr. Webb. All right.
Mr. Worthington. You made a remark a while ago that I should like to ask you about to see what you meant by it. You said that whatever papers you had you had turned over to Mr. Boland, or something of that kind.
Mr. Watson. Yes.
Mr. Worthington. Did you say that?
Mr. Watson. Yes; the papers that we used.
Mr. Worthington. Your remark: "Whatever I had, Boland has."
Mr. Worthington. What did you mean by that?
Mr. Watson. Yes.
Mr. Worthington. It is the papers that we went before these people with, the data that he furnished. He furnished to me a paper—
Mr. Worthington. I do not want to go over those details again; but did you turn over to him all the papers that you had and that you had used?
Mr. Watson. According to your recollection?
Mr. Watson. Yes; I did.
Mr. Worthington. Is it possible you might have turned over the pamphlets that you go down here, and that these pamphlets that you have produced have come into your office since?
Mr. Watson. Well, I don't know.
Mr. Watson. Well, I don't know; I don't know. It is possible that. I did; but I don't know.
Mr. Watson. That is all I wish to ask, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. Web. You may stand aside, Mr. Watson.
The witness was thereupon excused until Friday, May 31, 1911.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM P. BOLAND—RECALLED.
W. P. Boland, having heretofore been duly sworn, was exam-

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM P. BOLAND-RECALLED. W. P. Boland, having heretofore been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Boland, have you the subpena that was served on you at the instance of the respondent in this case?—A. I think I have a copy.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We had a subpœna duces tecum served upon this witness, Mr. President. I have him here simply for the purpose of having him produce the papers he was asked to produce, or state that it is impossible for him to do so. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ask him if he has the papers. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Have you a copy of the subpoena served on you?-A. I am sure I have it. Whether I have it here

Q. I have the original here with the return of the Sergeant at Arms. Will you look at that and tell me whether that is the paper a copy of which was left with you?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that it would be sufficient for counsel to call for the papers, and then, if he does not get what he seeks, he can show that the subpæna has not been complied with.

The WITNESS. I have the tonnage books with me, but I do not have them here, because I asked the gentleman if I was going to be called this afternoon. I wanted to know from the Sergeant at Arms if my name was to be called this afternoon, and they did not seem to know, and consequently I left the books at the hotel.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Let me ask you about these things in the order in which they are mentioned in the sub-poena. First, the tonnage books of the Marian Coal Co. You say you have them at your hotel?-A. I have them at my hotel, and I have a memorandum of the weights or tonnages right here with me.

Q. I do not care for that without the books themselves. The next is, "The records of said company showing all shipments of coal by that company since the beginning of their operations."—A. I have that.

Q. At your hotel?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. The next is: "And all maps, pamphlets, data, statistical tables, and other papers pertaining to the Marian Coal Co. which were submitted to George M. Watson in connection with the attempted settlement of the litigation with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., or the sale by the said company to the said railroad company of its property, and which were returned by him."—A. That I have not got, because I never gave him any papers or ever received any papers from him.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all. The books can be brought here Monday, and we can examine them and see if we care to make use of them.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Provided they are competent.

The WITNESS. I will have them here Monday. I can have them here in 10 minutes.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We will have the books here Monday,

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The witness has suggested that he can have the books here in 10 minutes. Then he can be recalled this afternoon. I merely suggest that, in order that we may expedite the trial of this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of counsel in that regard?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Of course we do not care to examine the books to-night. We can not keep the Senate waiting while we examine those books. We can examine them just as we examine those books. We can examine them just as well Monday morning, before the Senate meets, if the witness will have them in the office of the Sergeant at Arms at 10 o'clock Monday morning.

The Witness. Very well. I will do that.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I suggest to the honorable counsel for the respondent that he proceed to examine another witness. Mr. Boland will go for the books immediately, and be back in 10 minutes. Counsel does not certainly wish to tell the Senate that he desires a prior opportunity to examine those books. He has never manifested that desire heretofore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the manager insists upon it, the witness will produce the books as promptly as possible, and in the meantime counsel can call another witness.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. We will call Mr. C. G. Boland.

TESTIMONY OF CHRISTOPHER G. BOLAND-RECALLED.

Christopher G. Boland, having heretofore been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) A subpœna has been served upon you at the instance of the respondent, requiring you to produce certain papers here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will read a description of the papers as it appears in the subpena and then ask you whether you have the papers. Did you bring a "letter from R. W. Archbald to C. G. Boland, dated November 13, 1911, and papers mentioned therein and returned herewith"? It should be "therewith"; the sub-pœna reads "herewith." It should be "returned therewith." You understood that was what was meant, Mr. Boland?—A. did not pay much attention to what was said in that regard. I have the subprena.

Q. You are aware of the fact that it appears here that Judge Archbald wrote you a letter on the 13th of November, stating that he had seen Mr. Loomis and that his efforts were without avail and saying at the end of it that he returned certain papers. You remember that?-A. I was questioned in regard to it heretofore.

Q. And you stated that you did not have the papers?—A. That I did not have the papers.

Q. Can you give the Senate any information as to what became of them after they were returned to you?-A. I inquired after my last appearance on the witness stand in reference to them, and the best information I could obtain was from Mr. Pryor, who also appeared as a witness here, that he had been asked to prepare some data or statistics for Mr. George M. Watson in reference to the Marian Coal Co. property.

Q. I do not care to have a statement by the witness as to what has been told him, but I want to know whether you have found any of the papers which were returned to you in that letter of Judge Archbald to you of November 13, 1911?—A. No, sir.

Q. You can not tell what has become of them?-A. No, sir; I can not, except that Mr. Pryor told me he believed he saw the papers in the office of the Marian Coal Co. I questioned W. P. Boland as to his knowledge of the papers and the letter of Judge Archbald, which is referred to here, and he had no recollection of them, so that I was unable to locate the papers.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well; that is all.
Mr. Manager FLOYD. No questions.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire. He may be discharged finally unless there is some desire on the part of counsel or the managers to retain him.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We may need this witness in rebuttal. The PRESIDING OFFICER. He will remain in attendance,

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, that is all, with the exception of the respondent himself and Mrs. Archbald, and certain documents and exhibits that have been referred to, something in the way of documentary evidence, which it will take a few minutes to refer to. We would prefer not to examine Mrs. Archbald at this hour of the day, and would like it very much if the Senate would now adjourn until Monday morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the managers in that regard?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I am informed that the Senate has some other business which it desires to transact this afternoon. I had hoped that we could get through with the examination of the witness—Boland—so that the respondent could conclude on Monday the examination of all of his witnesses, including the testimony of himself, but Mr. Boland has not returned, and in view of the suggestion that the Senate has other business that it desires to transact at this time, I acquiesce in the suggestion that we let the furher trial of this case go over until Monday.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate sitting as a court considering the articles of impeachment adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the managers on the part of the House, the respondent, and his counsel retired.

MEXICAN NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY CO.

Mr. SMOOT. I introduce a joint resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 147) appropriating the sum of $7,245 out of money appropriated by Senate joint resolution No. 129, for the payment of transportation of American refugees from points in Mexico to the American border, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That out of the money appropriated by Senate joint resolution No. 129 (public resolution No. 49), providing for transportation for American citizens fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico, there shall be paid by the Secretary of War to the Mexican Northwestern Railway Co. the sum of $7.245, in full settlement of the statement rendered to A. W. Ivins and E. E. Bowman, dated August 22, 1912, for the transportation of American refugees from points in Mexico to the American border.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM W. WEDEMEYER.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. WILLIAM W. WEDEMEYER, late a Representative from the State of Michigan, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions received from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House, which will be read.

The resolutions were read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 3, 1912.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM W. WEDEMEYER, a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, at the proper time I shall ask that a day be set apart for the purpose of commemorating in a proper manner the character and life of the late Mr. WEDEMEYER. I ask at this time for the adoption of the resolutions I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan submits resolutions for which he asks present consideration.

The resolutions (S. Res. 419) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved. That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM W. WEDEMEYER, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I move, as a further mark of esteem and respect, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 6, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 4, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Once more in the dispensation of Thy providence, Almighty Father, our hearts are bowed in sorrow.

Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day; Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away; Change and decay in all around I see; O Thou who changest not abide with me.

So may our faith be fixed in Thee; so may our hopes lead on to the brighter day. Let the everlasting arms be about the members of the stricken family to uphold and sustain them in the awful shock, assuage in Thine own way their grief and comfort their sorrows; help us to work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work. Thus may we fulfill our destiny and pass on unperturbed into the somewhere prepared for Thy children. So we pray, so we hope, so we aspire through the faith once delivered to the saints. In the name of Him who is the resurrection and the life. Amen. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CARY, for 10 days, on account of death in his family.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE-REMOUNT DEPOT, FRONT ROYAL, VA.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Committee on Appropriations will be discharged from the further consideraappropriations will be discharged from the further considera-tion of House document 1204, Sixty-second Congress, third ses-sion, being a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, trans-mitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting estimate of appropriation for the construction of the necessary officers' quarters and other buildings required at the remount depot, Front Royal, Va., and the same will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There was no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, H. R. 26874.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 26874) making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the reading of the bill for amendment be resumed.

The Clerk read as follows:

For witness fees and other legal expenses incurred in suits instituted in behalf of or against Indians involving the title to lands allotted to them, or the right of possession of personal property held by them, and in hearings set by United States local land officers to determine the rights of Indians to public lands, $2,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in the payment of attorney fees.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, in line 18, page 6, in the paragraph which has just been read, I notice that the words "question of" have been omitted before the word "title." These words were in last year's bill, which read:

Suits instituted in behalf of or against Indians involving the question of title to lands allotted to them.

I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas why those words were omitted from this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We left them out because we thought the words were immaterial and that the word "question" was only descriptive.

Mr. FOSTER. By leaving out the word "question" is it possible for the department to go ahead and look up the title to any of these lands that it may see fit, whether the question of title is raised or not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the justification for this item arises from the fact that Indians are allowed to file upon the public domain, and the committee think that when questions of title arise at the local land offices they ought to have some one to represent them. That is the object of this appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me this word ought to be inserted in this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman shall offer that amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to insert, after the word "the," in line 18, page 6, the words "question of."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 18, after the word "the," insert the words "question of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners, $4,000, including not to exceed $300 for office rent.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, simply for the purpose of submitting a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent to extend some remarks in the Record, for the purpose of printing certain newspaper articles and editorials with reference to tolls through the Panama Canal.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York World, Dec. 23, 1912.]

Prof. Emory R. Johnson, the special commissioner named by President Taft to investigate the approximate tonnage which will pass through the Panama Canal, asserts that even if we levy instead of remitting the regular toil of $1.20 a net ton on our coastwise shipping, this shipping passing through the canal in 1915 will amount to 1,000,000 tons. The remission of these tolls constitutes a concealed annual subsidy of $1,200,000 in the first years of the canal's operation.

We have had in the tariff more than enough of indirect taxation of one class for the direct enrichment of another class.

Let the Government levy this $1,200,000 from our coastwise monopoly. After it has that $1,200,000 safely in its Treasury, let it then honestly and openly put the question whether the country wants a direct subsidy of $1,200,000, or of any other amount, paid by the Government to that monopoly. Then we shall have a clean-cut, unbefogged issue for the people to decide.

If the people do not want a subsidy, it should not be paid under an alias against their will. If the people do want a subsidy, it can be paid without repudiating our international treaties and sullying our national honor.

[From the Century Magazine, Nov., 1912.] A WAY OUT OF THE CANAL BLUNDER

A WAY OUT OF THE CANAL BLUNDER.

Anyone who knows how little consideration is given to the preparation of political platforms can readily understand how both the Democratic and the Frogressive Parties were "committed" to the blunder of advocating the exemption of our coastwise shipping from the tolls to be charged for the use of the Panama Canal. It is this sort of inside arrangement of party policies—which usually, in the last hours of fatigue, restlessness, and excitement, there is never time to discuss on their merits—that has cast discredit on platforms and has justified many a candidate in disregarding or modifying a given "plank." The overwhelming judgment of our people, as reflected in the press, that nothing is so important to us as a strict observance of our plighted faith—just as nothing is so important to a merchant as his credit and reputation for honorable dealing—shows how easy it is for half a dozen men in a hotel parlor, at the suggestion of some "good fellow," to lead a convention to the indorsement of a disastrous policy.

To claim that we have not broken our pledge that there shall be no discrimination in the tolls and conditions when we thus favor our own coastwise trade, as against that of Canada, Mexico, and Colombin—each with an Atlantic and a Pacific coast—simply does not rise to the dignity of a quibble. Already, by misrepresentation of the sense of fair dealing which pervades American commercial life, incalculable injury has been done to our standing abroad—an injury which can not be measured in money. After all our honorable diplomacy—the return of the Boxer indemnity, the open-door policy in the Far East, and the strict observance of our promise to withdraw from Cuba, which foreign sneerers at America said we never would observe, "and never meant to observe"—tit is shameful to have to drop to a lower plane of national conduct.

As if our cup of humiliation were not already full, it is argued that observe "—it is shameful to have to drop to a lower plane of national conduct.

As if our cup of humiliation were not already full, it is argued that we are at liberty to refuse to submit the question of the breach of the Panama treaty to The Hague Tribunal if Great Britain should make the appeal. "Nicht zwei dumme streiche fur eins" (Not two stupid strokes for one), says Lessing's character in "Minna von Barnhelm."

Unless we desire to become the welcher of the nations, it is time that the good faith of the people should find an adequate expression in the good faith of the Government. All the money saved (to whom?) in folls in a hundred years by the exemption could not compensate for the loss in money—not to reckon honor—which will result from the loss of credit and of great commercial opportunities all over the world. A strange way, indeed, to promote American commerce.

But there remains for us another chance—or will, if Great Britain shall a little longer pursue her friendly and forbearing course of wating for our public opinion to assert itself. The coastwise exemption should be repealed. And, our obligations aside, why should we enter upon a policy of subsidizing our ships just at the time when apparently we are giving up the policy of subsidizing our manufactures? Are we never to get away from the inequality of privilege that has already corrupted the sources of government by the "vicious circle." creating and feeding by legislation agencies whose natural interest it thus becomes to destroy the principle of equality? Why subsidize ships any more than subsidize rallways or newspapers or authorship? But if we must subsidize our ships, let it be done outright, in bills for that purpose, and not through the violation of the plain words of a solemn treaty.

Not only should the exemption be repealed, but, if we are to recover

Not only should the exemption be repealed, but, if we are to recover the ground that has been lost, it should be done in the first week of the December session of Congress. We feel sure that President Taft, whose misgivings tinctured his message of assent, now that the canal bill has provided for a modus operandl would not interpose his veto to the sober second thought of Congress. If the repeal is not accomplished, and if we refuse the appeal to The Hague, the great cause of arbitration—the substitute for war—will be set back for unreckonable years. And it is the championship of arbitration, together with his far-sighted and consistent defense and extension of the merit system, which will give the President his highest claim to the respect of posterity. The object of the latter is to keep politicians from gambling with the resources of office; the object of the former is to prevent Governments from gambling with the lives of men.

Should the repeal not be promptly made, it will become the duty

Should the repeal not be promptly made, it will become the duty of the people to organize to bring it about. We much mistake the temper of the country if within another six months its servants do not remove this blot on the national escutcheon.

[Editorial in The Independent.] THE PANAMA DISGRACE.

The President in signing the Panama bill calls it "one of the most beneficial that has been passed by this or any other Congress." That may be true, for it provides for the opening of an international highway needed for the last 400 years. But it is certainly true that the bill is one of the most discreditable and dangerous that has been passed by this or any other Congress, for it covers legislation that could never have been passed upon its merits, throws a heavy financial burden upon the American people, involves us in complications with European and American powers to an unpredictable extent, violates our treaty with England, puts us before the world as resorting to trickery to gain a commercial advantage, and destroys confidence in the arbitration movement in which the United States has had a leading part. Let us briefly enumerate some of the illegitimate features which this bill conceals:

which this bill conceals:

First. It grants to coastwise shipping a perpetual subsidy of an incalculable amount, millions of dollars a year at any rate. Now, if this money had been appropriated from a surplus in the United States Treasury, it would not be so bad, but it is not. It is money that we have borrowed for the purpose of building the canal and on which we must continue to pay interest indefinitely. That is to say, this new law puts the American people in the position of borrowing money at a cost of some $10.000,000 a year to themselves for the purpose of enabling the owners of coastwise ships to make a profit out of what might otherwise be a losing business. Worse than that. We have already given these men protection at our expense by the law prohibiting foreign vessels from stopping at two American ports. It has often been argued that we should subsidize the American lines that compete with foreign lines, but no one has ventured to put forth so preposterous a claim as that the coastwise ships should have a subsidy added to their monopoly as is done by this act. If any gratuitous favors of this kind are to be granted it would be less absurd to reverse it and grant free toils to American lines coming into competition with foreign lines instead of to those protected from such competition, and this would be no more of a violation of the treaty than the present act.

Second. The Panama bill admits free of duty foreign-built ships and shipbuilding material when used in the foreign trade. Already we hear complaints that this has caused the loss of millions and will mean ruin to American shipbuilders. That may not be true, or if true it may be worth the sacrifice. We are not arguing that point now. But we do say that such a sudden and unpremeditated change in our protective system should not be forced through on a rider to a worthy bill having quite another object.

Third. A like objection applies to the radical and extraneous legislation of the bill, such as that empowering the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine whether or not the ownership by any railroad of a steamship line is prejudicial to public interest and to compet if necessary the divesting of the steamship holdings. Such a measure, whether wise or unwise, affecting as it does the ferryboats of New York and San Francisco Harbors, the passenger steamers of Long Island and Puget Sounds, and the shipping of the Great Lakes, has no business in a bill stated by its title to be concerned only with "the opening, maintenance, projection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone."

Fourth. This discrimination in tolls in favor of our own ships is just what we protested against as unfair and put a stop to when it was a question of canals on the territory of Canada and New Granada. Fifth, Our treaty with Great Britain expressly prohibits such discrimination, as is shown by the fact that when the treaty was under consideration the Senate voted specifically against an amendment permitting such discrimination.

Sixth. President Taft's recommendation to Congress that the question of the interpretation of the treaty be referred for decision not to The Hague Court, but to our own Supreme Court.

[From the New York World.] A SURREPTITIOUS SUBSIDY.

A SURRETITIOUS SUBSIDY.

The proposal to subsidize American shipping, though often and eloquently urged, has never met with the approval of the people, and Senators have no right to introduce it in disgnise. What is still worse, they have introduced it in such a way as plainly to violate our treaty with England. The Senators who advocated it admitted that if the matter were brought before The Hague Court it would inevitably be decided against us, and we should then have to pay back the tolis collected from foreign vessels in the meantime, say 10 years or so; that is, whether the action taken by the Senate be right or wrong, it is what all the other nations of the world would call wrong. But Senator Cummins says that we will never consent to submit the question to such a tribunal; that there is but one tribunal to settle such a question—the arbitrament of war. In saying this Senator Cummins is advocating the violation not only of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, but, what is worse, of all our arbitration treaties.

[Editorial from the Louisville Courier Journal, Dec. 16, 1912.] THE LONG AND THE SHORT OF IT.

The exemption of the coastwise trade of the United States from tolls through the Panama Canal was, to begin with, flagrant and dishonest, a violation of the treaty obligations of the Nation, and, to end with, a gigantic and perpetual subsidy to a Shipping Trust quite as objectionable as the Sugar Trust or the Steel Trust.

The act of Congress was passed in the teeth of a presidential campaign. The Shipping Trust could afford to contribute a million of money to each party for its support. Mr. Taft, a candidate for President, signed the bill. Who, if not Perkins, of the Harvester Trust. In community of interest, worked the Roosevelt end of it we know not; but the Democratic end of it was worked by Lewis Nixon, once chief of Tammany Hall and now head of the Crescent Shipyard, of Elizabeth, N. J.

Such Members of Congress as gave any reflection to the votes they cast in its favor looked to a certain anti-English feeling, which, in the last equation, would carry with it the German vote and the Irish vote, not stopping to inquire where the spoliation of the Nation's honor and the people's money might lead—relying upon indirection and subterfuge to see them through—corruption and cowardice thus playing hide and seek with the public integrity and their duty.

Upon this simple statement, which can not be denied, the case admits of no debate. Behind Mr. Nixon the Steel Trust, with all its ramifications, stands paramount. Plate armor is his right bower, long-range guns his left, with every jingo in the land to whoop 'em up with "Who's afraid of John Bull?" Where falsification will not suffice, evasion is the word, and legal eminence, in and out of Congress, is employed to quibble and hoodwink when a straight vote for ship subsidy—which this legislation is, no more and no less—would never be dared.

War with England is unthinkable. But wars, nevertheless, are often provoked on less provocation. Both the Shipping Trust and the Steel Trust would welcome war with England or any other country, for the money mad know no relenti

Prof. Johnson was opposed, as we were, to the exemption from tolls of American ships in the coastwise trade, but he does not think that the increased competition of west-coast woods will seriously hurt southern lumber. He thinks that on account of their superiority southern soft woods will be able to substantially hold their own in the markets cast of the Mississippi against the west-coast product. We seriously doubt of the Mississippi against the west-coast product. We seriously doubt strength and durability, but it is doubtful if superiority on any other screen have an advantage of the Mississippi against the west-coast product. [Statement of Benjamin Ide Wheeler, president University of California.]

The device of remitting tolls on our coastwise commerce seems to me a peculiarly unfortunate method of subsidization. Why should a subsidy be provided solely for those ships which happen to use the canal?

[Statement of David Starr Jordan, president Leland Stanford University.]

I can see no reason why any American ships should be relieved from the necessity of paying their share in this matter.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Record an address by Gov. Eugene N. Foss, of Massachusetts, at the conference of governors in Richmond, Va., on December 5, 1912.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts to print certain matter in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

The address referred to is as follows:

[Address by Gov. Eugene N. Foss, of Massachusetts, at the conference of governors, Richmond, Va., Dec. 5, 1912.] THE DEVELOPMENT OF INLAND WATERWAYS.

INTRODUCTION.

I have asked to have the subject of our inland waterways brought officially before this conference because I am satisfied that to a proper settlement of the transportation problems of this country the concerted action of the States is absolutely necessary.

CONGRESS HAS FAILED.

We need not review the repeated failures of successive national administrations to provide constructive plans for the improvement of our transportation system as a unit.

INDEPENDENT STATE ACTION HAS FAILED.

INDEPENDENT STATE ACTION HAS FAILED.

If, on the other hand, we review the improvements which have been made by the individual States acting independently, we shall not find any substantial progress toward an effective general system.

The history of American waterways shows that State authority has failed and that the opportunities of effective Federal administration have been neglected.

The result has been that the waterways of the United States have never been developed as a system upon any national scale, but have been improved principally through the efforts of Congressmen to get a share of the rivers and harbors appropriations for their respective districts, and the efforts of those districts and of the States, independently of Federal aid, to help themselves.

But I do not believe that the situation is hopeless. The groundwork for cooperation is already laid. Only concerted action upon a comprehensive plan is now wanting.

CONCERTED STATE ACTION IS NECESSARY.

I am firmly convinced that the development of our inland waterways can be accomplished through the concerted action of the States affected; brought about not only by their own enterprise and the expenditure of State funds, but to an even greater degree through their united power in forcing from Congress an intelligent and broad-minded study of the in forcing from Congress an intelligent and broad-minded study of the whole situation.

As soon as the American people realize that it is directly counter to their own good to leave this important subject as the chief political perquisite of Representatives in Congress, they will bring about an end of this method of handling the question; and it is in every way proper that such concerted action should be taken, for the country geographically is a unit with respect to its waterways.

UNITY OF THE UNITED STATES WATERWAY SYSTEM.

UNITY OF THE UNITED STATES WATERWAY SYSTEM.

The United States is cut in two by the Mississippi River, which thus forms a trunk line, as you may say, of water communication from north to south.

Along the northern border we have the Great Lakes, making a most effective commercial frontier which unites us with Canada commercially while it divides us only in a territorial sense.

This chain of lakes (giving us a substantially east-and-west communication) forms, in conjunction with the Mississippi River, a remarkable waterway which has potentially no equal on earth, with a southern outlet for practically the whole of the middle section of our country and for eastern Canada as well.

This tremendous natural water system extends uninterruptedly to the Panama Canal, and the completion of that canal will give us a seaboard in one unbroken line from the cities of Puget Sound to Eastport, Me.

Me.

These, broadly speaking, are the great waterway projects which form the framework of our water-transportation system and to which the concerted attention of the several States should be given.

The governors of the various States have a splendid opportunity to impress upon their people the importance of realizing this commercial unity, and a concerted public sentiment must be aroused which will make it impossible for any private or special interest to secure from the Federal Government any appropriation out of harmony with the best general development of our commercial waterways, and which will compel the Congress to provide for a uniform and businesslike development of these natural resources.

I urge upon the conference of governors the imperative need of arousing and cooperating with this public sentiment as the only means of placing before the Congress a program of waterway development which will have public sentiment behind it and from which every vestige of special or selfish interest shall be eliminated.

In this work of coordinating public sentiment, and compelling the attention of Congress, the governors of the several States will find splendid cooperation in several public bodies which are already organized and hard at work on this line of progress.

The great River and Harbor Congress now in session in Washington is probably the most notable of these bodies.

Then there is the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association and the Lakes-to-the-Gulf Waterway Association, and the various public bodies which are concerned with the conservation of our natural resources.

All of these groups of citizens and officials are in a position to do splendid work along the lines here indicated, and they are doing it with a will.

INTERSTATE ACTION ALSO NEEDED.

Nevertheless, even with the most effective action which Congress can take, the responsibility will still rest in some degree upon the individual States, and they must plan and construct such local canals and subsidiary water channels as the general waterway development of the country may demand.

The task of the governors is to coordinate the action of the several States between themselves and to effect the still higher coordination of this uniform work with the work of Congress.

MASSACHUSETTS AS AN EXAMPLE,

I am proud to say that Massachusetts has to a great degree recognized the failure of the Federal Government to meet this crisis and has jumped into the breach with an appropriation of $9,000,000 for the development of the port of Boston.

The Commonwealth is doing this as a matter of self-preservation, and the act is a wonderful expression of the public spirit and enterprise of the people of Massachusetts.

Massachusetts not only realizes that she must do her part (without waiting for Congress) in maintaining and improving her commercial standing, but she is especially resolved that the opening of the Panama Canal shall find her ready to do business with the rest of the world. We have not only appropriated $9,000,000 for the development of the port of Boston, but we are hard at work upon the problems presented by the present undeveloped condition of our principal rivers.

Our State commissioners are cooperating with the commissioners of Connecticut in a project for the commercial development of the Connecticut River.

This river, which is of splendid potential importance, can be dredged.

Connecticut in a project for the commercial development of the Connecticut River.

This river, which is of splendid potential importance, can be dredged at least as far north as Springfield, and perhaps Holyoke, for ships suited to navigation in the Sound and along the Atlantic coast.

It can be furthermore dredged for smaller vessels and reenforced by canals to furnish an effective outlet for the western half of New England, opening up the interior of that section in a wonderful degree to water traffic.

Railroad advocates are accustomed to jeer at the development of this river as a visionary project, forgetting that Europe has utilized much smaller streams and has channeled them for from 50 to 100 miles inland and built upon their banks some of the greatest seaports of the world at distances as far from the seaboard as northern Massachusetts is from Long Island Sound.

(I shall take up more in detail later on the discussion of these great inland seaports of Europe.)

Furthermore, we are bent upon the commercial development of our other principal rivers, such as the Taunton and the Merrimac.

The Taunton River penetrates one of the most important industrial sections of our State, and we propose to make it effective as a means of cheaper transportation.

We are at work on the development of the Merrimac River, planning its commercial development at least to Lowell, and hoping that New Hampshire will cooperate with us to make it a commercial waterway as far north as Nashua, and perhaps Concord.

THE CAPE COD CANAL,

We are also recognizing now as never before the importance of digging canals to supplement the natural waterways of the State.

Under private auspices a canal is now being dug across the neck of Cape Cod, and this splendid private enterprise has enabled the State to concentrate its own resources upon our harbor and river develop-ocncentrate its own resources upon our harbor and river development.

The project for a Cape Cod canal was first taken up in the earliest days of the colony and abandoned.

New York, however, had built the Eric Canal, and we now know that it was that canal, small and imperfect as it was, which made New York the Empire State.

We are realizing that if our ancestors had dug the Cape Cod Canal when the Eric Canal was built, Massachusetts might never have lost her commercial supremacy.

Cape Cod has undoubtedly been a serious physical barrier to the maritime development of Massachusetts.

At least 2,000 vessels have been wrecked in the Nantucket Shoals alone, and hundreds of sailors have perished in these dangerous regions.

In spite of this difficulty, there is at the present time an annual movement of 25,000,000 tons of traffic around Cape Cod and 500,000 passengers.

The Cape Cod Canal is estimated to represent an expenditure of $6,000,000.

But if only half of this total traffic passes through the canal, a

But if only half of this total traffic passes through the canal, a substantial return will be made on the investment.

This is to be a sea-level canal, with only 8 miles of excavation, the entire length of waterway being 13 miles and the depth at low water 25 feet entire length of waterway being 13 miles and the depth at low water 25 feet.

It brings New York and Boston 66 miles nearer than they were before, by water.

Surely a project of this kind, with its wonderful possibilities of shortening distance and cheapening and safeguarding maritime traffic, ought not to have been left to twentieth century enterprise.

It ought to have been consummated a hundred years ago.

Another lesson that we are learning in Massachusetts is very significant in connection with our pending waterway enterprises.

We are realizing now that if we had concentrated at an earlier date upon the development of our waterways, we should not have lost to the West and to Canada many of our so-called heavy industries—industries in which the cost of the transportation of raw materials is a serious factor.

One by one these great industries are moving westward and northward, where transportation, particularly by water, is cheap and ample. We are determined that in the future the industries of New England shall have their raw materials on practically as favorable a basis as any other section; and we thus hope to overcome the handicap which 100 years of shortsighted and narrow-minded policy has fastened upon us.

TRANSPORTATION CRISIS IN UNITED STATES.

TRANSPORTATION CRISIS IN UNITED STATES.

I think I am speaking conservatively when I say that we are standing at the critical point of American history in regard to our transportation.

The key to the situation undoubtedly lies in the development of our waterways.

Let us see why.
For 50 years the financial and business interests of the country have concentrated the greater part of their energies on the construction and extension of our rallroad service.

The United States has therefore become wonderfully well equipped with trunk railroad lines and local railroad facilities.

We have gone to an extreme in this direction, and have practically surrendered our own transportation interests into the hands of the railroads.

The country has gone railroad mad.

roads.

The country has gone railroad mad.
One hundred years ago this country was digging canals in earnest;
4,000 miles of them were constructed; then came the era of the railroad, and the canals and waterways were allowed to go to ruin.

Also, during our whole history we have spent but five hundred millions on our rivers and harbors as against possibly eighteen thousand millions on our railroads.

Meanwhile France, for example, has equalized her expenditures, putting seven hundred and fifty millions into harbors and waterways and seven hundred millions into railroads.

This policy, taken in connection with our peculiar tariff system, has resulted in stunting our foreign commerce and in impeding the development of our coastwise shipping.

It has resulted in subordinating one of the most vital considerations of American life to the private needs of the railroads, OUR ONE-SIDED POLICY HAS RESULTED IN EXCESSIVE FREIGHT RATES.

Consequently, freight rates have reached a point many times as high as they would be if an effective water competition existed, and the cost of freight is one of the principal factors entering into the cost of living. We are at this moment wrestling with the problems of railroad regulation.

We are in debate as between the advantages of private and public resilienced expressions.

We are in debate as between the advantages of private and public railroad ownership.

The problems are vexatious and deep seated.

We are only just now learning how to handle them.

And it is remarkable that throughout all this discussion and public agitation, more attention is not centered on waterway development as the one most effective means of meeting the railroad situation and compelling a fair railroad rate.

WATER-BORNE COMMERCE THE NATURAL COMPETITOR OF RAILROADS.

WATER-BORNE COMMERCE THE NATURAL COMPETITOR OF RAILROADS.

Water traffic is the cheapest known means of transportation.

It is so cheap that it forms the most effective natural competition for the railroads.

It is remarkable that the railroad systems of America have been so successful in choking off water competition, in buying up our water terminals and leaving them unused, and in preventing proper recognition by Congress of our waterways as the natural avenues of commerce. I am told that the average charge per ton-mile for freight on the American railroads is 7½ mills.

Contrast this figure with the average per ton-mile for freight on the Great Lakes, which is eight-tenths of a mill, or less than one-ninth the average charge for the same service by the railroads.

But the most significant comparison has yet to be given.

It is this: During the season when the Great Lakes and their tributary channels are freely open to navigation the railroads which compete with the Great Lakes transportation service reduce their rates to 1½ mills per ton-mile on the average, or approximately one-quarter of their usual charge.

And yet, instead of maintaining this natural competition between waterways and railroads as the most effective possible stimulus to industry, we have abandoned most of our earlier waterways projects—not only abandoned them, but permitted their confiscation by the railroads.

And where the water traffic itself is not dominated by the railroad we have permitted the railroads to utilize the old canal banks for their own right of way—a remarkably effective means of choking off any attempted restoration of the canal project itself.

EUROPEAN EXAMPLE.

European countries have uniformly developed their waterways as a means of assuring commercial prosperity and rapid growth, and they have done it with a truly prophetic instinct, in anticipation of the necessity.

necessity.

A generation ago Belgium, with an area less than Massachusetts and Connecticut, had over 1,000 miles of internal waterways.

On this system of canals she has spent over $80,000,000.

In Belgium and in Holland the ocean is brought to every city, and as a result these little countries have become world powers in commerce and manufactures.

A ton of raw material comes to them 1,000 miles for $1.

The British Isles have 4,000 miles of canals and an equal length of impraved waterways.

improved waterways.

Germany has over 10,000 miles of internal waterways, much of which represents engineering work, and her policy makes a highway of every stream that has water enough to fill a canal.

She makes immense appropriations for the extension of these waterways.

Austria and Hungary have spent fully 200,000,000 on rivers and Even China has such a wonderful system of shallow canals that almost every town can ship to the ocean by water.

WATERWAY DEVELOPMENT PREVENTS RAILROAD MONOPOLY, BUT ENLARGES

Again, a remarkable illustration of the fact that the railroads and waterways, while natural competitors, are of mutual benefit is found in the experience of Europe.

When the River Elbe was adapted to canal service the river traffic increased fivefold, and yet the railroads which had to compete with the river were not ruined, but paid greater dividends than ever before.

The River Main has been channeled, and while there is a railroad on each side of it and the river traffic has grown more than tenfold in 10 years, yet the railroad trade has not suffered a decline, but has been increased.

The Northern Railway of France computer with the railroads and while there is a railroad trade has not suffered a decline, but has been increased.

years, yet the railroad trade has not suffered a decline, but has been increased.

The Northern Railway of France competes with numerous canals. Surely here we would expect to find injury done, if anywhere, to the railroads, but, on the contrary, this railway is said to have been the most prosperous of any in France.

It has prospered when other railroad systems have been in trouble. London is well served by railroads—more intimately related to the rest of the country by railroad service than most of the cities of America.

Nevertheless, London has not hesitated to invest $186,000,000 in the development of her port and the dredging of the Thames to make that port effective for modern shipping.

Liverpool has spent $125,000,000; Manchester—practically an inland city—has made herself a seaport by the investment of $90,000,000. Glasgow has invested $40,000,000; Newcasile, $80,000,000; Bristol, $30,000,000; Hamburg, $100,000,000; Aursep, $45,000,000. All this expenditure represents the most effective possible means of checking the aggrandizement of the railroads or the inflation of freight rates under railroad control.

No one, however, can say that this development has wrought harm to the railroads of Europe, whether owned privately or by the Government.

On the contrary European waterway development has proceeded so ment.

On the contrary, European waterway development has proceeded, so to speak, hand in hand with the railroad development; and each has been made possible and has profited by the development of the other.

A trunk line of railroad can, to a certain extent, defy authority and maintain a high rate of freight.

But a canal is essentially a public way.

Lines of towboats and barges can move upon a canal or river in direct competition with each other; monopoly can be prevented; and the average freight rate via waterways is therefore kept automatically at the lowest figure consistent with maintaining the service.

It is for these very reasons that our waterway development must proceed under the public auspices of State and Nation and must be pushed as a work of public exigency, just as the Panama Canal has been pushed, irrespective of any railroad influence.

Still the railroads are dependent solely upon the prosperity of the district which they serve, and this prosperity increases in proportion as we open up cheap transportation for low-grade freights.

This we can only do with the help of the canal.

We are still congesting our railroads with a mass of cheap, low-grade freights which they can not carry economically.

We can not get satisfactory service from the railroads for the shipment of our factory products so long as these roads are tied up with undelivered shipments of coal, pig iron, and other raw materials.

The European practice is to move these low-grade freights by canal and river.

The European practice is to move these low-grade freights by canal and river.

The railroads, freed from this low-grade business, at the same time build up the general business interests which they serve and increase the mass of high-grade freights which they must still continue to carry and which they always will carry, no matter how many canals are built.

are built.

The public servants of France and Germany have recognized this basic difference between the railroad and the canal and have seen that the proper development of both together would be mutually beneficial.

Our railroads have been afraid of canal development from the most narrow-minded reasons, and their successful activity in defeating our canal projects has reacted disastrously upon themselves.

EUROPEAN PORTS ARE INLAND, CONNECTED WITH THE SEA BY IMPROVED CHANNELS.

The secret of the success of the great commercial countries of Europe lies in their remarkable foresight, in the way in which they have prepared for expanding trade and commerce, and in the location of their great commercial centers.

Practically all of the great seaports of Europe have been equipped with modern transportation facilities far in advance of their actual requirements in anticipation of growth.

With us the typical commercial city is located either directly on the seaboard or some natural inland waterway.

Europe has built her seaports inland and connected them with the sea by dredging and excavation.

For example, Hamburg is 76 miles inland, and has been made available as a seaport only by the expenditure of a hundred million dollars.

dollars.

But by reason of her inland location she is completely surrounded by a vast producing territory, and the genius of the German nation has foreseen the strategic advantage of bringing the ocean to the interior of her great industrial sections.

In comparison New York and Boston at best have only 50 per cent territorial efficiency, for they face directly on the ocean, and even Chicago pays heavily for her location on the shore of Lake Michigan in the fact that it shuts off all industrial environment on the northeast.

Antwerp is another of the great seaports of Europe, but she is located 55 miles from the ocean.

She still suffers from the natural handicap of the tide.

It is not often that a ship can make the entire journey up to Antwerp in one turn of the tide.

It is not often that a sinp can make the entire journey up to Antwerp in one turn of the tide.

But Antwerp draws from a productive territory which completely encircles her.

Manchester, London, and Glasgow are equally significant examples of the European idea of commerce.

These cities are all far inland, Manchester being 50 miles—measured along the available water levels out to natural ocean channels—from the sea and shut off absolutely by nature from any maritime connection. Glasgow is situated 60 miles inland from the Irish Sea, and has been made a great seaport only by dredging the river, which presented in the beginning a more serious obstacle than most of our American rivers to commercial development.

The River Clyde was originally a river of such small size that it could be forded by man or beast at many points.

I need not multiply these examples.

Great Britain and the commercial countries of the European Continent have become tremendous powers in the commercial world only through their public spirit and foresight in providing themselves with maritime facilities, either natural or artificial or both, as might be the case.

The main reason for the commercial supremacy of these countries is in the fact that they have already met and solved the transportation problems which we are still facing.

They went through their formative commercial period long before we did; they wrestled with the problems of municipal, private, or State ownership of waterways and railroads; and while we are still under the domination of our railroad monopolies, other countries have found the way out, even to the extent of digging a way through to the ocean at an enormous expense.

We must therefore look to the older communities of Europe and frankly copy their example; and by doing this we shall find that practically all the commercial centers of Europe have grown through the joint and parallel development of marine and rail transportation.

PANAMA: THE FIRST STEP IN OUR NEW POLICY.

By digging the Panama Canal we have struck at the heart of the problem.

We are obtaining for ourselves by concerted public action the type of transportation which is potentially many times cheaper than railroad transportation, and Congress, by the sections of the Panama Canal act with respect to the ownership of steamships by railroads, has taken effective action to make this potential value real.

We are thus beginning to see the utility of water-borne transportation as a natural means of controlling railroad monopoly.

THE LAKES-TO-THE-GULF PROJECT.

The Panama Canal being an assured fact, the most important remaining projects now on foot for the reconstruction of American commercial supremacy are the Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway, the Atlantic deeperwaterways project, and the restoration of the Eric Canal to meet the needs of modern commerce.

While I can not undertake the discussion in detail of all these projects, I wish to refer briefly to the Lakes-to-the-Gulf enterprise as the one which in the largest sense will form the backbone of our future commercial development.

The distance from Chicago to the Gulf of Mexico is slightly in excess of 1,600 miles, and the connecting link formed by the Chicago River and the Chicago ship canal is only 38 miles long.

The remaining distance is covered by existing natural waterways which need only to be channeled and improved.

Of this total distance of 1,659 miles the entire route is now open, I understand, for vessels drawing 4½ feet.

For over three-fourths of the way, i. e., from the Gulf up to St. Louis, vessels of 8 feet draft are accommodated.

To complete a modern 14-foot channel from the southern end of the artificial Chicago ship channel down to the Gulf is estimated to involve an expenditure of $150,000,000; and the broadening of the Chicago River and ship canal it is estimated will cost $100,000,000.

By this development we shall have a 14-foot channel connecting the Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico at a total expenditure of $250,000,000, with an estimated annual maintenance charge of possibly $10,000,000.

Even if only the territory immediately tributary to the Mississippi were to be benefited, nobody could dispute the commercial importance of this scheme.

But, in fact, there are many large and important rivers tributary to the dispute the commercial and the standard waterway which feed and are reconstructed the section and the standard and the feed and are conveniented the section and the section and the standard trivers tributary to the first contact the section and the section an of this scheme.

But, in fact, there are many large and important rivers tributary to this great waterway which feed an area comprising the greater part of our industrially developed continental territory.

This backbone once constructed, the laterals of the system will quickly follow, and the existing rivers will be dredged and the necessary east and west canal channels will be excavated. The diversion of the course of rivers for irrigation purposes shows what may be done in this respect.

east and west canal channels will be excavated. The diversion of the course of rivers for irrigation purposes shows what may be done in this respect.

The only argument that I have ever heard advanced against this project rested on the fact that we could build a north and south railroad from Chicago down to New Orleans at a slightly lower cost and double track it—the statesman in question sagely arguing that we could give the unexpended difference to public charity.

The absurd contention that a double-track railroad from Chicago to New Orleans would serve as economically and satisfactorily as a vast river system with practically unlimited carrying capacity need not be refuted before this audience.

Some years ago a project was brought up for the construction of canal which should connect Pittsburgh with the Great Lakes, but went by the board, and in place of it the railroads interested in tisted and iron industries constructed railroad outlets for the Pittsburgh district at enormous cost.

I think it should now be evident that if the steel industry had provided itself with a waterway outlet to the Lakes instead of spending its money on the railroads. Pittsburgh might have maintained its old industrial supremacy.

Its freight rates on raw materials would have been reduced to perhaps one-tenth of their present amount, and the industries which by reason of this high cost of freight are now moving northward and westward and even into Canada might have been retained in Pittsburgh indefinitely.

Cheap rates on low-grade freights are the basis of industrial success.

Cheap rates on low-grade freights are the basis of industrial success.

THE ERIE CANAL.

The Eric Canal is a project to which the attention of New York State

The Eric Canal is a project to which the attention of New York State is carnestly needed.

I mention it as one of those projects to which State initiative rather than Federal initiative may well be given.

It will furnish us with a new outlet from the Lakes to New York City and the Atlantic Ocean, and will enable us to compete once more with the great 14-foot channel of the St. Lawrence system.

Twenty years ago the Committee on Railways and Canals of the Fifty-second Congress said: "On the day that it becomes possible to send ships direct from the Great Lakes to the ocean by way of the St. Lawrence River, while they are unable to go by way of the Hudson,

* * the merchant marine of the United States, which has had a new birth on the Lakes, will receive its death blow from Canadian competition."

That statement was made in 1892, and the report advocated the connew birth on the Lakes, will receive its death blow from Canadian competition."

That statement was made in 1892, and the report advocated the construction of a deep-water channel from the Lakes to the Hudson. Somehow the railroad interests succeeded in convincing the people that New York interests would be better served by a mere barge canal. But Canada proceeded with her own development, and her guiding principle was that freights should be carried in an unbroken bulk from the Lakes to whatever foreign port they were consigned to, or, at most, with only one transshipment.

We must have a way out to the sea for our own ships by which they can come and go as freely as if on the ocean.

Canada has flanked us commercially and is taking the commerce of the West through Montreal.

Already our farmers are finding their closest competitors in the great Canadian Northwest, and Winnipeg has become the greatest wheat market in the world.

Our wheat supremacy passed from Chicago to Minneapolis and then to Duluth, and now Manitoba has become the center of the wheat market.

Our cereals compete with those of the Saskatchewan Basin, which, with its splendid outlet to the world, will displace our own agricultural districts unless we provide a low-cost outlet to our markets.

THE CANADIAN SYSTEM.

One of our obstacles to waterway development is found in the failure of our canal promoters and advocates to insist upon channels of sufficient depth.

clent depth.

Consequently, while the Canadians carry an unbroken cargo of 80,000 bushels on a channel 14 feet deep, our Erie system is limited to a cargo of 8,000 bushels on a channel less than half the depth of the Canadian system.

The Canadian method is right; our way has been wrong.

The Canadian system has developed in accordance with a broadminded governmental policy.

Our policy has been badly defined, narrow, and selfish.

Canada has spent on her canals and navigable inland waterways a total of $130,000,000, as against $475,000,000 on her railroads—a ratio of about 1 to 35.

We have expended sums on our waterways and railroads on the ratio of 1 to 36.

Relatively Canada has spent 10 times as much on her waterways as we have spent.

we have spent.

With the development of the Canadian canals the cost of carrying freight has almost steadily declined.

For instance, on the Sault Ste. Marle Canal in 1890 the cost of a ton-mile was 120 mills.

Twenty years later it had dropped to seventy-nine one-hundredths mill.

mill.

And at the same time the total shipping has tremendously increased. For example, the total freight carried from the Canadian system of canals in 1908 was 17,000,000 tons.

Within the next year it jumped to 33,000,000 tons.

Yet the number of trips diminished, showing the steady increase in the tonnage of the average carload.

In fact, the average cargo in 1908 was approximately 1,000 tons.

The comparison of this record with the pitful shipments of our own canals need not be dwelt upon here.

Canada has recognized the essential difference between waterway and railroad traffic, and has realized that both kinds are indispensable.

The function of the waterways is to move the lower grades of freight at a cheap rate.

at a cheap rate.

The function of the railroad is to move the higher grade freight and to move them fast.

That is the natural distinction between railroads and inland water-

That is the natural distriction between the ways.

Throughout the greater field of raw materials and cheap merchandise speed is not essential, but economy is.

The raliroads have a sufficient field of service and profit in connection with the higher grades of freight which demand prompt shipment and upon which a heavier charge can be paid.

Our public policy should have recognized this relation between waterway and railroad transportation and maintained it as the basis of a more equitable adjustment between the two methods.

I think I have made it clear that we are the only country of commercial importance which has ignored this vital consideration.

THE ARGUMENT FOR SPEED.

THE ARGUMENT FOR SPEED.

The railroad advocates are loud in their criticism of the inland waterway as an impracticable means of transportation on account of the alleged slowness of waterway service; and we may freely admit that, in general, the railroads ought to render a faster freight service than could be given by the inland waterways.

The fact is, however, that we have congested our railroads with so much low-grade freight that all American freight movements are impeded beyond reason; and we shall not get a satisfactory rate of speed from the freight train until we have learned to ship our raw materials more generally by water.

Let us examine this statement in detail:

In 1910 the American railroads moved, in round numbers, 18,000,000,000 freight-car miles, and the number of freight cars in service was 2,000,000. (The actual number of car-miles was 18,349,000,000, and the actual number of freight cars in service was 2,135,000.)

Is,000,000.000 freight car miles, and the number of car-miles was 18,349,000,000, and the actual number of freight cars in service was 2,135,000.)

From this it is evident that our freight cars moved on an average of 9,000 miles a year, which is slightly in excess of 24 miles a day. So much time is lost by demurrage, on sidings, and in the repair shop that the potential service of our freight cars is reduced in practice to this excessively low figure.

It will be noticed that the figure of 24 miles (or, to be exact, 24.6 miles) per day represents the average travel of an American freight car. Of course, there is a good deal of fast freight that moves more rapidly, but I am a shipper of machinery and other manufactured goods, and I know from my personal experience that many carload shipments proceed at the rate of only 5 or 10 miles per day.

I do not think that we need to debate at any great length from these data that the inland waterways are capable at least of rendering a sufficiently fast freight service for our cheaper grades of freight.

I personally know of many freight vessels which have averaged not 24 miles a day, but 150 miles a day, day in and day out, during every month of the year.

If our waterways were properly developed, the immediate effect upon the railroads would be to enable them to move the higher grades of freight at a much increased average rate of speed.

The European practice of utilizing the inland waterways (natural and artificial) for low-grade freights has, indeed, taken this business away from the railroads, but it has not crippled the railroads.

The average percentage of net revenue to capital on American railroads for 1911 is stated to have been 5.36 per cent.

In Germany, with its splendid equipment of waterways and canals, the average per cent of net revenue to capital on the German railroads was 5.09.

CONCLUSION.

If we were to rest our appeal for the development of our inland waterways only on the necessity of effecting a better freight service through the interior of our country, the issue would even then be unmistakable.

But this is only the lesser of the two considerations involved, for we are rapidly assuming a more important place in the larger field of foreign trade.

But this is only the lesser of the two considerations involved, for we ner rapidly assuming a more important place in the larger field of foreign trade.

The opening of the Panama Canal will not only stimulate our own domestic commerce, but will act as a stimulus to our foreign trade also. It will make our western seaports easily available to Europe, and it will put our eastern seaports within the reach of the Orient.

But we can not benefit as we should by this expanding commerce without a radical change in our public policy respecting transportation. We must have outlets to the ocean from our principal industrial centers; we must have lateral canals connecting with our principal waterways, and we must open up as much as possible of our continental territory to our own merchant marine and to the ships of other countries as well.

Only from the most parrow and short-sighted policy could we further ignore the need of such development.

The change of public sentiment in favor of a broader commercial policy is further evidenced in the universal dissatisfaction with established tariff schedules and the demand for closer relations between ourselves and the rest of the world.

Surely we can not shut our eyes to the growing sentiment for an expanding international commerce on the one hand or to the pressing needs of our own domestic transportation on the other.

Both considerations unite in giving the sumost weight at this time to a plea for the concerted development of all our principal inland waterways, our lakes, rivers, and canals; for the building up of our existing seaports; and for the planning of future ocean terminals upon the broadest scale.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of special agents at $2,000 per annum; for traveling and incidental expenses of such special agents, including sleeping-car fare, and a per diem of $3 in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field or ordered to the seat of government; for transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Officer of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty; for pay of employenot otherwise provided for; and for other necessary expenses of t Indian service for which no other appropriation is available, $83,960.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the gentleman from Texas in charge of the bill the reason for cutting down this appropriation $44,000?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say that there are several agents formerly under this item that are now specially provided for. Therefore it is necessary to deduct that amount and put them in under the heads of the agencies in the respective States, and I will point those out as we go along. This is a lump-sum appropriation. We have appropriated along through the appropriations for the States for these various items so that the totals are the same; but instead of a lump sum we have made special appropriations in the States under the proper heads for these agents.

Mr. MANN. The specific appropriation for the States maintains appropriations for these special agents, but I take it that these special agents would be confined to those States. What is the object of removing the discretion of the department in having special agents sent from one place to another where they are most needed and requiring them to be retained in particular States?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the gentleman from Illinois misapprehends the matter. The justification will show the object of this.

This same amount was carried in the hill last year. As the reading of the item indicates, it is used for the various expenses of the service which are not otherwise provided for. This fund is indispensable to the efficient administration of the service and permits of a smaller appropriation than would be practicable if the several matters were specifically provided for. That is the justification.

Mr. MANN. I do not see that that justifies. amount is the same as last year. You have reduced the amount and made specific appropriations, which the witness declares would require a larger sum of money.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Here is a more full explanation: Mr. MERITT. I should like to submit a justification for this item, as

CHANGE IN FORM OF ITEM "CONTINGENCIES, INDIAN DEPARTMENT."

CHANGE IN FORM OF ITEM "CONTINGENCIES, INDIAN DEPARTMENT."

The item as it appears in the act of 1912 is badly arranged and so indefinite as to make it difficult in some cases to determine whether expenses should be paid from this or some other appropriation. This is especially true with respect to "traveling and incidental expenses of " " other officers and employees of the Indian service."

It is obviously not intended that all traveling expenses shall be paid from this appropriation; if they were, there would not be enough for this purpose alone, to say nothing of anything else; yet with such a specific provision for such expense there is always a doubt as to what appropriation should be used. These doubts, with the ever-present possibility of a disallowance by the accounting officers of the Treasury, will be climinated by the proposed change in phraseology.

Mr. MANN. The amount appropriated for the current year is $125,000 and not $115,000, which I suppose was the appropriation for the last fiscal year. Now, last year you increased the amount to $125,000, and you say that is necessary. This year you decrease the amount to $80,960.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That brings up the controversy relative to the district agents in Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. Does that involve the district agents of Okla-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes. None of these agents could be used in Oklahoma, and we were willing to increase the amount last year so that we could meet the increased demand in Oklahoma. For that reason we propose to dispense with $100,000 appropriated for district agents in Oklahoma and permit it to be used for agents all over the United States instead of specifying special agents in Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. Last year you increased to

Last year you increased the amount so as to authorize special agents to go to Oklahoma, and now you reverse it and make an appropriation for agents in Oklahoma. What is the theory upon which you do that; why do you change the theory from that of last year to that of this year?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that I noticed from the hearings that it is stated that this is the same amount that was appropriated last year.

Mr. MANN. That probably was the estimate. The amount appropriated last year was $125,000, unless I am mistaken.

Mr. CARTER. That is my recollection of it, but I noticed this on page 36 of the hearings:

The following justification has been submitted:
"This is the same amount as last year. As the reading of the item indicates, it is used for various necessary expenses of the service which are not otherwise provided for. This fund is indispensable to the efficient administration of the service and permits of a smaller appropriation than would be practicable if the several matters were specifically provided for."

Mr. MANN. Why was the amount reduced from $125,000, which they say is necessary, to $80,960?

Mr. CARTER. I was not aware that it had been reduced until the gentleman just called my attention to it. Perhaps the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] can make some explanations

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly, Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will state that last year when the bill passed the House no appropriation was made for the district agents in Oklahoma. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will remember that I submitted some observations at that time as to why I thought the district agents ought to be continued and that it would be a calamity if they were discontinued. The Senate increased the appropriation for special agents and other purposes, and in the conference it was the desire, it seems, of the House conferees to carry $50,000, I think it was, of the amount that was to be used for district agents under this item. Therefore the amount was increased in the Senate to $125,000, as I remember it.

The House committee in reporting the bill this year has again eliminated the appropriation for district agents, and therefore they reduced this appropriation the amount that had been addded to it last year which was to be used for district agents. Personally I think it is a mistake, as I said last year, to discontinue the special agents in Oklahoma, and when we reach the item in the bill relating to the Five Civilized Tribes I shall submit very briefly some observations upon the subject of district agents. I think that explains why the amount was decreased in the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of conducting hearings and taking evidence to determine the heirs of deceased Indian allottees, pursuant to the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., pp. 855-866), and the regulations thereunder prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, $25,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentle-man will state his point of order against the paragraph. I think that we would gain time if he would do that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I may withdraw my point of order after proper explanation as to the necessity for the

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would not the proper procedure then be to strike out the last word and ask for an explanation? Mr. MONDELL. I prefer to reserve the point of order, if the gentleman does not object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Oh, I do not like to object.

Mr. MONDELL. Without objection, I reserve the point of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman has a chance to expedite the passage of the bill by not reserving a point of order, but asking for an explanation. It seems to me that we ought to hurry this bill. However, I do not object.

Mr. MONDELL. My reservation of the point of order is on the general proposition that there is no provision of law for an expenditure of this character.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the reason for this appropriation is more than apparent, and when the gentleman hears what it is, I believe he will be satisfied with it. In 1910, two sessions back, we passed an act, I think introduced by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke], which provided that the Indian rolls, as kept by the Secretary of the Interior, should the Indian rolls as to beirships. This is what that bill did. It imposed some new work on the Indian Bureau for which they had no appropriation. The necessity for the appropriation it seems lands are sold extensively, as they must be from time to time, and under regulations and through the courts, it becomes peculiarly important to know who the heirs of the deceased Indians are. The department does not attempt to issue patents or deeds direct from the department, for which the department stands sponsor; but, on the contrary, they do issue to the purchasers of the land a deed signed by all the heirs. It becomes important of course to tell who the heirs are. In numerous Indian reservations, as the gentleman no doubt is aware, Indians have multiplicity of wives. One Indian may have three or four wives and have several children.

Mr. MONDELL. That is in the running of the years. Mr. FERRIS. Even of longer duration than that. Mr. MANN. The gentleman means shorter duration.

Mr. FERRIS. No; at the same time.

It becomes necessary to know what children are interested in a particular plece of property. The Indian rolls are the best authority we could get on the subject, and in order to make the Indian lands worth anything and the titles to have any stability for the purpose of sale or loan or barter, you must fix the heirship somewhere. The two Houses of Congress agreed in 1910 that the Interior Department rolls should be final, and they need this money.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman want the House to understand that we are recognizing polygamy among the Indians or anything of that kind?

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman will bear me out in saying that it has been the tribal custom for Indians in the more backward tribes to have several wives at the same time. They do have them, and that has prevailed in my own county in Oklahoma up to two years ago. Then the Indian agent said, "We will have no more plurality of wives," and so he ordered each Indian buck to make a selection and take the wife of his choice in and be legally married before a probate court and that was done. However, that left women with children who have no legal marriage, and he is attempting as best he can by the use of this fund to help this condition. There has to be place to stop somewhere. I do not know how many tribes it has prevailed in, but it has been prevalent among the Kiowa and Comanche and numerous others of the backward tribes. I do not think it prevails in the eastern half of the State among the Five Civilized Tribes. I feel sure it does not, for the bulk of them are not real Indians at all; they are white people with a small strain of Indian blood, and should be allowed to go their way

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has made it very clear that it is necessary to have some fund available for the purpose of determining cases of heirship. In fact, those who are familiar with the conditions in the Indian country have never had any doubt in regard to it. My objection to this new item of appropriation, however, is based on the fact that it proposes to spend the money of the people of the United States for the purpose of determining title to Indian property. Now, people who own property, whether they be Indian or white, certainly ought to be able to pay the expense necessary for determining the character of the title and determining the ownership. There ought to come a time when we cease to treat the Indians as indigents, to be supported by the people of the United States, without regard to the property they own. Such a policy as we have pursued and as this item proposes to now inaugurate in a new line is not only bad in principle as a governmental proposition, unfair to the taxpayers of the country, but its effect upon the Indian is injurious. The Indians ought to learn-

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment. I am in earnest about this thing. I think the gentleman and his committee, without intending to do it, have for years past been too liberal, if I may use that term, in using the money of the Government in expenditure on behalf of Indians who are fully competent by reason of ownership of property to pay their own way. The department has at present on the reservation in my State an agent whose business it is and has been for some months past to determine questions of heirships. They are badly tangled. It will require a considerable length of time to untangle them and determine whom the heirs to various pieces of property are. But that property has value. Those Indians are not paupers

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield at that point?
Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment—to determine who the heirs are, and in that case I have understood that the department had some method whereby the expense was chargeable against the Indians or against the property to be ultimately reimbursed. It ought to be. The Indian ought to be made selfrespecting. We should not go on forevermore treating these people as though we were going to coddle them along for all time; to me is thrice apparent. In an Indian country where Indian that it is our purpose to continue to look after their property for them without seeking reimbursement from them. We should bring them to realize and understand that while the Government is as a guardian protecting them from the hand of the despoiler, or attempting at least to do so, at the same time they must pay the reasonable cost for the care of their property and the determination of title. Now, if the gentleman had made the item $50,000, reimbursable in cases at least where reimbursement is possible, I think the item would be much more defendable than it is at $25,000, one-fourth of what the department asked for, paid out of the Treasury for the purpose of investigating titles Why, many of these Indians are much better off to property. financially than the average white people of the United States who support the Government. The people of my Common-wealth are fairly well to do, much better off than the average American citizen, and yet I doubt whether the average wealth in the State among the white people is much greater than that of the Indians on the reservation, taking into consideration the value of their property. There is not any reason under heaven why the Government should bear this expense. We continue to pauperize these people; we continue to make them feel their dependence upon the Government, coddling them along and paying their debts, providing for those things for which they themselves should provide, and which in the majority of cases I imagine they are perfectly willing to provide.

While I shall not insist upon my point of order, or shall not even demand an amendment, it does seem to me that it is a very great mistake not only to continue many of the items already in this bill, but to start out on new lines of expenditure entirely without justification, in view of the fact that we are taxing all the people for the purpose of caring for the property of a few of the people who happen to have red skins.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the regular administrative work of these agencies does not provide for these heirs, and that it is necessary, on account of the court, that these heirs have no authority to appoint? A great many of these allotments are going to heirs, and it is impossible to determine what portion of the money is coming to them unless It is first ascertained who the heirs are. The department will be handicapped unless we give them this amount of money.

Mr. MONDELL. If the department has any difficulty in determining who the heirs are, of course it means money. said, the department has now in my State an efficient attorney engaged in this class of work. Here is an appropriation to pay for that kind of work. I am not objecting to making money available for this kind of work if it is not now available. If it is not obtainable from the funds of the tribes, then it should be made available, and afterwards provision shall be made whereby these amounts may be taken from the funds and should be made reimbursable. I object to the items because it is taxing the people of the United States with an obligation to take care of the property of the red brother. The latter is very much of a man, as I have met him. They would suggest that in caring for their property, provided we keep the cost in bounds, we should pay for them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is what the department said: In order to clear up the tangled condition of the estates of deceased Indians so that the inherited lands may be disposed of to white settlers, and so that the money may be available to provide the Indian heirs with funds with which to begin the farming of their own allotments and the building of sanitary homes, it is desirable that this item should be retained in the bill.

I think that is sufficient justification for this item.

Mr. MONDELL. I have not suggested, as the gentleman knows, that it is not necessary to have money for the work, but I have suggested that there is no justification for the payment of the money of all the people for work of this character.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know the point of order which the gentleman has raised.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] yield to me for a minute?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming if he is in favor of the act of June 25, 1910. which places the matter of administering the estates of deceased Indians in the Interior Department rather than in the courts?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman, who is an expert in Indian matters, is, as I understand, author of the act?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONDELL. I am willing to accept the judgment of the gentleman from South Dakota as to whether that act is good and wise legislation until I learn otherwise.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to say the proposition of making a charge against the estate was carefully considered it would be rather difficult to determine what the amount ought to be in each case, and that in any event it would be a mere bagatelle so far as the Government is concerned. propose to appropriate $25,000 for the purpose of administering this law. I think the gentleman will appreciate that in the course of a fiscal year there will be probably several hundred cases determined, and that the amount in each case would probably not exceed $20 or $25. Of course, we could authorize a charge to be made to cover the expenses in each case, take it out of the proceeds received from the sale of the land when the land is sold, and the expense to the Government would be more than reimbursed.

Mr. MONDELL. Why not do business with the Indians in a businesslike way?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The time will probably come when that will have to be done-when we can determine just how much the charge ought to be. Personally, I question very much whether we ought to make a charge to the Indians for determining the heirship of inherited lands.

The gentleman talks about the Indians in his own State. He knows that in many instances the allotment of an Indian on some of the reservations in his State has very little value, not over $200, and perhaps it might not be sold for several years, and if a charge was made it would be rather difficult to collect it in many cases. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's position, and have tried on every occasion when I have had opportunity to favor legislation that makes expenditures on account of the Indians reimbursable where it is proper to do so. I think, perhaps, in this instance some way might be found so that the Government could be reimbursed for this small expense that will occur in each case in determining heirships.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me at that point, he says, "just a small expense." It is true we are appropriating only $25,000, although the department asked for $100,000. I doubt if $100,000 would be too much to cover the expense in all these cases

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is all.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand there are 350 cases which require a good deal of investigation upon one reservation in Ultimately this investigation on all reservations will amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Now, I have no desire to split hairs in a matter of appropriations for the benefit of the Indians. We should be liberal, but I do think we ought to get down to a business basis in regard to these matters. These people own property. Some of the allotments are not very valuable it is true, but in addition to the allotments most of these Indians share in holdings in common, of very considerable value. Many of them have funds to their credit in the Treasury, and yet the people of all the country are going to be evermore taxed for the purpose of settling the questions of ownerships.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In other words, to administer the affairs of the Indians.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the time has arrived when we ought to teach the Indian—and I think he will be a willing pupil—that he must pay for the administration of his estate, and then possibly gentlemen like my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] will have among the Indians themselves some support in a matter in which I sympathize with him very considerably some support from the Indians themselves in opposing large expenditures out of their funds. But so long as we hire agents and send them abroad over the land to investigate questions affecting Indians at the public expense, the Indian has no special interest in it. It does not cost him anything; he does not care how much of the Federal money you spend; he can not be expected to, and therefore he sometimes fails to differentiate between the funds which he himself must ultimately meet and pay, and those expenditures which are made from the Federal Treasury

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming withdraws his point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether the act of June 25, 1910, referred to in the item, was not the omnibus Indian bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman means the gentleman from South Dakota and not the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris], I will say that the act of June 25, when this act was presented to the House, and it was thought | 1910, was what is known as the omnibus bill, and I will also say in that connection that this provision, this legislation that is referred to, was enacted in a prior act of Congress and re-enacted in the act of June 25, 1910.

Mr. MANN. I would not lay any great stress upon the fact of anybody in particular supporting the bill, because it had so many items in it that nobody could say what was in it except the author, probably, in whom we had and still have great confidence. I take it that the question then was whether the Government, through the Interior Department, would settle the heirship of deceased Indians, or whether the matter should be left to the probate courts. We have recently seen that there was at least some suspicion in reference to the matter of leaving the settlement of the question to the probate courts in some parts of the country. I am somewhat delighted that the gentlemen from Oklahoma are in favor of having the Interior Department settle the heirship of Indians outside of Oklahoma at the expense of the Government, probably, as has been stated, at nominal expense, while apparently some gentlemen from Oklahoma who do not have the privilege of the floor of the House seem to be in favor of having the heirship of Indians in Oklahoma settled by the probate courts, not only at the expense of the property of the Indians but at a very high rate of expense.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MANN.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that Oklahoma has for many years had a commission known as the Dawes Commission, and that they have not been under the control of the Indian Department as have all the other States? And is not that the reason why Oklahoma has been separated from the other States in the matter of the making of these laws?

Mr. MANN. I will answer that question categorically, no, that is not the reason; although there has been a Dawes Commission as long as I can remember, and probably will be after

I am dead and gone.

Now, we make the Indian's estate in the probate court in Oklahoma pay the expense of probating the estate, including proof of heirship. In some cases the expenses of the probate court apparently run as high as 20 per cent of the total amount of the estate. Here it is proposed to have the Government pay the expense, which the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] says is a nominal expense. I think it is well to have the Secretary of the Interior find the heirship, and I can see no reason, when that is done and the property is sold, why the property should not pay back to the Government the expense of proving the heirship.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Right at that point, if the gentleman will permit me, the act of June 25, 1910, does not necessarily require the property to be sold. It may be partitioned and divided and patents issued to the heirs, and they may retain possession of it. So in cases of that kind there would be no moneys from the sale to reimburse the Government for the expense incurred in determining the heirship.

Mr. MANN. Well, it would be a charge against the property. My recollection of the act of June 25, 1910, is that it does not provide that this work shall be done at the expense of the Government. If I am wrong about that I shall be very glad to be

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have the act here, if the gentleman would like to have me refer to it. It simply provides that when an Indian dies, the Secretary of the Interior, upon notice of hearing, under such rules as he may prescribe, shall ascertain the legal heirs of such decedents, and his de-cision thereon shall be final and conclusive. There is nothing said about who shall pay the expense.

Mr. MANN. No; there is nothing said there, nor was there anything said here when the act was passed. I do not think it was contemplated by Congress when that act was passed that the final expense should be borne by the Federal Treasury in-stead of by the estate which was settled. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] suggests that the estimate was $100,000, and my friend from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] says, Oh, well, that is a mere nominal sum."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think it is, Mr. MANN. It would be to my friend from South Dakota, but to me $100,000 would seem as large as Pikes Peak.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 7, by adding at the end of line 24 the following:

"Encouraging industry among Indians: For the purpose of encouraging industry among Indians. For the purpose of encouraging industry among Indians, and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops, $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, which sum may be used for the purchase of animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary to enable Indians to become self-supporting: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925, and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924; and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually on the first Monday in December a detailed report of the use of this fund."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming desire to be heard on the amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. I do, Mr. Chairman. I do not think the item is subject to a point of order, but I should like to be allowed to speak briefly to the merits of the amendment.

The act of April 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 70-83), appropriated the sum of $25,000 to be used as a reimbursable fund at the Fort Belknap Reservation for the purchase of machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment and animals to enable the Indians to engage in the raising of sugar beets and other crops. There are approximately 154 accounts outstanding against the Indians on this reservation by reason of their participation in the use of the money appropriated.

These accounts involve the purchase of agricultural implements, fence wire, and seed.

The total expenditures made under the appropriation since its establishment amount to $29,768.26, and more than $15,000 has been already repaid by the Indians and is being again used for a similar purpose under the provisions of the act of March 3. 1909 (35 Stat. L., 781-795), which provides that the money repaid shall be available for reexpenditure.

The act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 269-277), appropriated the sum of $15,000 for the purpose of encouraging industry among the Indians residing on the Tongue River Reservation, in the State of Montana, to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops. This money has been expended in the purchase of agricultural implements, mares, stallions, seeds, and nursery stock, and sales amounting to more than $12,000 have been made to the Indians, and the collections already made amount to more than $7,000.

The sum of $30,000 was appropriated by the act of March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. L., 1058-1061), for the purpose of encouraging industry among Indians, and this money was apportioned in various amounts, ranging from $1,000 to $5,000, to 15 different reservations. Expenditures have been made in the purchase of farming implements, equipment, wagons, horses, and other breeding stock, and while the actual number of Indians who participated in the use of the money on the various reservations is not known at the present time, the reports received indicate that the money is serving a very useful purpose.

At the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana $10,000 was set aside from "Indian moneys, proceeds of labor," to be used as a reimbursable fund, but this sum is entirely inadequate to meet the needs of these Indians. It is estimated that at least $25,000 more could be used, but the tribal funds will not permit the setting aside of that sum for the purpose. At the Menominee Reservation in Wisconsin a reimbursable fund of $7,500 has been established, but here, too, this sum is entirely inadequate.

The three appropriations referred to above, augmented by the two reimbursable funds established from tribal moneys, amout to $87,500, and it has been inadequate to aid all the Indians, who not only need but want and are asking for assistance from the Government in providing stock and agricultural equipment under the reimbursable plan.

The Indian Office has found it necessary to deny requests because of the limited funds available. In April last reports were called for from various reservations with a view of ascertaining how much money in addition to tribal funds and individual Indian moneys now available would be needed to enable the Indians on the various reservations to become established in farming, stock raising, and industries which would place them on a self-supporting basis. The reports received indicate that an appropriation of $9,123,350 would be necessary for the purpose.

These estimates are based upon the apparent needs of the Indians to enable them to engage in agricultural pursuits, including the live-stock industry. The amount asked for, therefore, is reasonable and could be made to serve a very useful purpose in the industrial upbuilding of the interests of the Indians, a very large number of whom, through lack of means to farm their lands, are earning a livelihood through working for their neighbors at such times as they can obtain employment.

Regulations governing the use of the $30,000 appropriated by the act of March 3, 1911, were prepared and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and the last paragraph of these regulations provides that they shall apply to and govern the use of similar appropriations and funds where the law will permit.

It is believed that a fund of $250,000, in addition to what has been already appropriated, used under the regulations referred to, will go a long way toward helping the Indians to reach that state where they will be self-supporting, who, under the present conditions, are unable to get ahead because of economic embarrassment.

It will be seen that we have from time to time made these appropriations for the general good of the Indians, for the encouragement of industry among them, reimbursable. I am very much in favor of this kind of an appropriation. I have on various occasions in the discussion of this bill called attention to what I conceive to be a radical error, a very unfortunate policy—that of appropriating indiscriminately for the benefit of Indians, in many cases for Indians who have large sums in the Treasury of the United States, at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States.

We should be liberal toward our Indian wards. We should do everything that is necessary in the fulfillment of our duty toward them. We have been doing more than that, but above all things we must teach the Indian to be self-supporting and self-respecting. We can not teach him to be self-supporting, and he never will be self-respecting, so long as, without regard to the amount of property he owns, we scatter Federal funds broadcast for his benefit.

In many cases there are Indians who have no available funds, though they have very considerable property. There are many other cases where Indians have very considerable funds that are doled out to them in driblets, driblets that are dissipated used oftentimes for the purchase of articles of but little permanent use or value to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman withhold for a moment? Mr. Chairman, I move that at the expiration of seven minutes Will the gentleman withhold for a moment? all debate upon this paragraph be closed.

Mr. MANN. I would like to be heard for a few moments on this

Mr. FERRIS. I will withhold my motion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, the purpose of this item is that we shall provide a loaning fund to be expended in the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the purchase of cattle, horses, agricultural implements, or other articles, the possession of which will enable the Indian to become self-supporting. Books are to be kept with him, and in the course of time he is expected to repay the Government the sum.

The history of the past reimbursable items is the strongest argument in favor of this one. For the Indian has proved himself in almost every case to be mindful of his obligation, anxious to meet it, and in the great majority of cases these sums loaned to the Indians have been and are being returned much more speedily than we could have expected.

I have talked with a number of gentlemen, particularly with the agent for the Northern Cheyennes in Montana, in regard to these funds, and the story he tells me is a marvellous one, remarkably interesting. That tribe is rather backward in some repects in its development. They are a wonderful race of Indians, manly in many ways, but backward in development as an agricultural people. We have been purchasing seed, tools, and implements for them, and they have been paying for them. They are learning that in their dealings with the Government they must return all their dealings with the Government. they must return all that is expended in their behalf.

We should now inaugurate this policy generally. made great progress in breaking up the communal system. We are giving the Indians their land in severalty, in many cases turning them loose with 40, 80, or 160 acres of raw land that a white man, conditioned as they are, could do nothing with and the ownership of which to the Indian is simply a burden.

Of course, they can not be expected to go out on sagebrush plains and grub out the brush and dig their laterals, or to go out on the dry farms, where irrigation is not possible, and without funds cultivate, plant, and reap.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. This is a very important matter.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not take any more time on this amendment. The committee is consuming no time at all and the gentleman is consuming much

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to talk again on this particular item.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, the gentleman hopes to continue to talk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we are endeavoring to teach habits of industry to these Indians. That is the hardest thing for an Indian to learn; not that the Indian is lazy, for he is not. He is among the most energetic of men, but he is the greatest aristocrat, as that term is sometimes used, known in the world. No race of people has ever lived that has had such an ingrained prejudice against labor. The noble red man degrades himself when he labors either mentally or physically, according to the tribal tradition handed down from time immemorial. It is a part of his blood, a part of his being. It is hard to get away from it. We are trying to teach the Indian that labor is honorable, and it is an exceedingly hard lesson for him to learn) Yet we turn him loose on an allotment without seed, without tools, without stock, with neither plow nor ox, nor grain to plant, and expect him to become self-supporting. It is impos-We ought not to give these Indians funds unlimited with which to buy these things. We ought not to buy them for them and charge the cost to the good people of these United States, but we should do what we have been doing wisely and success--that is, establish a credit fund for them; and if we shall have the same success in the future with this credit fund that we have had in the past it will mark the most important step yet taken in the civilization of the Indians, a step as important as the day when they first moved from the tepee into the walled tent, where he can put up a cookstove and a washtub.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How many Indians are there in the United States?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr.

Burke], who is an authority, says about 300,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And to those 300,000 the Government makes allotments, both of lands and money, does it not? Mr. MONDELL. There are very few Indians now receiving any annuities

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They are wards of the Government?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And receive a direct financial benefit from the Government without any quid pro quo.

Mr. MONDELL. As to about four-fifths of the items in this

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No such consideration is given to the young white farmer who wants to start out and work the arid or semiarid ground.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No consideration is given to the mill hand who has no opportunity for employment or for profit except as his own energy brings it about. So the Indian is the favored ward of the Nation?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, surely. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to trespass upon the gentleman's argument, because it is a fine argument, and his statement is clear and lucid; but does the gentleman not bring us up to the problem which some day may have to be faced in this country of providing means for assisting the white man who wants to cultivate the ground or the white man in the city who finds himself in need?

The time of the gentleman from Wyoming The CHAIRMAN.

has again expired.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has taken three or four minutes of my time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for three or four minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. One minute. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to have his time extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. My proposition is this: You can not get blood out of a turnip. You can not wring a fortune or a liveli-hood from a stone. The Indian will not become self-supporting hood from a stone. unless he is assisted, where he has not the stock, the machinery, or the seed.

I would not give it to him, but I would loan it to him, and it has been proved conclusively to the satisfaction of anyone who will investigate these records that some of these Indians have returned these moneys from time to time and in small sums until they finally, in many cases, have entirely wiped out their obligations; and others are wiping them out. They return these sums; they are learning the habits of business; they are learning their obligations; they become more self-respecting. If we do not do that, we must continue as we are in this bill to give them the moneys of the good people of this country without expecting a return of the sums necessary to put them on their feet and start them in business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think, possibly, on the general purpose which the gentleman from Wyoming has in view I might be in accord. The gentleman stated a number of times in the course of his address to the committee that this money had been returned so completely by the Indians that the Gov-ernment might well take the chance of making the appropriation. I have such high regard for the statement of the gentle-man from Wyoming that I am going to call his attention to a little report, so he can more fully explain that. Two years ago we made an appropriation for this same purpose, reimbursable, and we have a report from the Secretary of the Interior as to the expenditure of that fund. There was expended under that appropriation $151.70 for seeds, trees, and so forth, Flathead, Mont.; $150 for the same purpose at Pechanga, Cal.; $687 for live stock at Soboba, Cal., and $107.66 for implements, harness, and so forth; $1,430.50 for live stock at Santa Fe, N. Mex.; $495 for live stock at Shawnee, Okla.; $737 for live stock at Walker River, Nev.; and the total amount expended for encouraging industry among the Indians out of that appropriation was $4,541.06. It was a fund made specifically reimbursable, and we learn by the report of the Secretary of the Interior that it has been reimbursed to the extent of $150. Out of $4,541.06

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I am going to yield for an explanation. I have no doubt it is forthcoming-$150 was returned. The gentleman from Wyoming very often referred to the fact that wherever we had made these appropriations and these expenditures that they were promptly reimbursed, so I thought I would call his attention to this official communication on the subject.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman from Illinois is aware of the fact that these expenditures are loans that were made during the past year. Does the gentleman think it probable or likely or proper that they should be returned so soon as this?

Mr. MANN. I did not suppose they would all be returned, but the appropriation was made two years ago. I did not assume that a repayment of $150, which does not begin to equal the interest on the investment, is a very large reimbursement of the appropriation.

Mr. MILLER. Would the gentleman expect when a loan is made for live stock that it will be repaid during the exact season in which the loan was made?

Mr. MANN. Certainly not; and it would not have to be paid during the exact season by any means. The appropriation was made for the fiscal year 1912, that is true, but it became available on the 1st day of July, 1911. I should suppose there would possibly be some of it reimbursed by this time. However, I simply call the attention of the gentleman, who is going to put in the RECORD a statement of how it has been reimbursed, to these facts. I would be glad to see those statements.

Mr. MONDELL. I would be very glad to read the gentleman some of those statements now if I had the time.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming has offered an amendment which is full of legislation and is undoubtedly subject to the point of order. However, before making the point of order, which I intend to make, I want to say that, on line 8, page 6, there is an appropriation of $300,000 to encourage agriculture among the Indians, which covers the point which the gentleman has referred to very completely.

Mr. MONDELL. Not reimbursable. Mr. FERRIS. However, the item has already been agreed to so that even if the amendment was not subject to the point of order, I take it that it would not be the judgment of the committee to adopt the amendment. However, I make the point of

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? The item to which the gentleman has just referred is an appropriation chargeable to the people of the United States and no dollar of which is to be returned.

Mr. FERRIS. Undoubtedly, but the gentleman at great length and with considerable force urged as an original proposition that the Federal Government should not expend anything at all on the Indians.

Now, that policy is so well defined and so well recognized by everyone, that we must care for the indigent Indians all over the country, that the gentleman's argument must of necessity

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Oklahoma wants to be fair, and he generally is fair, but when he says I have argued at great length that we should not do much of anything for the Indians, he certainly misstates my position.

Mr. FERRIS. I did not mean to misinterpret the gentleman: but his argument is that we should not do anything for them from the Federal Treasury, which I intended to say to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. On the contrary, so far as possible, we should teach the Indian that he must care for himself and, so far as he is able, to reimburse the Federal Government for its assistance

Mr. FERRIS. And with what the gentleman says I am in accord to a large extent, but I have referred to the Indians all over the country which the Government must look after. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes this provides for new and original legislation, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That superintendents and acting superintendents in charge of Indian reservations, schools, irrigation and allotment projects are hereby authorized and empowered to administer the oath of office required of employees placed under their jurisdiction.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I regret that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] did not have more time in which to address the committee on the interesting subject we had under discussion a moment ago, for in his discussion he only got far enough to refer to one reimbursable item, made available very recently, and he was unable by reason of the lapse of time to got do cases where reimbursable items were contained in an appropriation bill some time ago and where Indians have at times made repayments. For instance, as to the Tongue River item, which the gentleman had not time to refer to, although he has it before him, I find in that case the Indians have been repaying quite rapidly. I will place in the RECORD a statement of the Tongue River fund.

The statement is as follows:

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Fer-RIS] proposes going on forever appropriating for these people out of the funds of the people of the country generally without any hope of any return or without regard to its necessarily disastrous effect upon the character and dignity of the Indians rather than to appropriate for a loan which the Indian has shown he desires to make and is anxious to return.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield? Will the gentleman observe that the paragraph over which he is exhorting does not carry a penny of appropriation? It merely authorizes the head of an irrigation project to administer oaths to employees in order to save notary fees.

Mr. MONDELL. I thought the gentleman had been here long enough to know that sometimes we debate all sorts of matters on a pro forma amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will debate the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. MONDELL. But I am debating an important matter. At least, it ought to be an important matter, with a Democratic majority with its claim of proposed economy. I want you gentlemen to economize and save the money of the people. At the same time I desire to assist in retaining self-respect among the Indians. The way to do it is not to appropriate for them without stint or limit, to throw the people's money among them as a drunken sailor scatters his dollars, but to do a banking business with the wards of the Government and thereby teach them habits of business, teach them the importance of their obligations to the Government and their obligations to their fellow men, and give them a chance in life without making

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MANN. All. Charlman, the gentleman from Wyomfor [Mr. Mondell] says I did not refer to the appropriation for encouraging industry among the Indians of the Tongue River Reservation, Mont. It is true that when the gavel of the Chairman fell I had not yet reached that report. I think I can add even a little to the information furnished by the gentleman from Wyoming on that subject. There an appropriation was made for a specific reservation, and during the last fiscal year the total amount loaned to the Indians was $4,292.02, and the amount that was repaid by the Indians was $4,174.55. Nearly the entire amount was reimbursed. The appropriation was made specifically. But I did call attention to the general item, to the appropriation encouraging industry among the Indians, reimbursable, where, out of an expenditure of $4,500, the large sum of $150 had been reimbursed during the same fiscal year, and I mentioned the fact that where the specific appropriation was made, $4,175 was reimbursed out of $4,292.

The gentleman proposed not only a general appropriation, reimbursable, not specific in its location, but leaving it arbitrarily to the department for the next 10 years to do as it pleased, without any accounting practically to the Government, and without any appropriation made by Congress hereafter.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the gentleman does admit that, where specific loans of funds are provided, at least in the one case referred to the Indians have met their obligations promptly and under all the circumstances to a very much greater extent than we could have anticipated.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how much we could have anticipated. I have no doubt that most of the money that could be expended in this way would be reimbursed if it were required to be reimbursed or if it is required to be reimbursed. I doubt if it would be reimbursed very rapidly if an appropriation of money were simply left in the hands of the department to expend as they please, without being appropriated for every year, where they had control of it and did as they pleased about it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I just came in and listened with much interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and I cordially agree with him in his efforts to assist this Democratic House in its principles of economy, and especially in his enthusiastic and vigorous efforts to assist in preventing a deficiency in the next House, with a still larger and greater majority. It reminded me of an incident that occurred on Monday, when I came down here. I had just come into the Pennsylvania Railroad station and I met in the café a chauffeur who had come in to buy a piece of pie, and, as he a chauneur who had come in to buy a piece of pie, and, as he turned around to go out, I said to him, courteously and pleasantly, "Is not this a beautiful day?" He said, "It is a domned foine day, thanks be to God for it." I looked at him a moment, and I said, "Would you say just that if it had rained all day?" He looked up at me and said, "I think I could, but not with the same ardor." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse Clara D. True for traveling expenses incurred by her under instructions from an official of the Indian service in the closing of her accounts as a former superintendent in the Indian service,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph

The CHAIRMAN The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I see from the statement an explanation of the reasons given for this claim, and I shall withdraw the point of order in the end. But why is it necessary, when they propose to adjust the accounts of a superintendent of a reservation, that they send a general superintendent and a financial officer to the agency, or require the superintendent to come to the office of the general superintendent, any more than it is necessary, when they adjust the accounts of a postmaster, to send the Postmaster General or one of his agents to the post office or require the postmaster to come to Washington? Why does it require the personal attention of any person to adjust accounts which are supposed to be made out subject to be transmitted by the mail?

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will yield, we have the statement of the Indian Commissioner. I know the gentleman is well informed on this bill, and I think he will admit that this is one of only two or three items that may at all be considered a claim. This bill is free from claims, aside from one or two little items that are simply self-evident.

Mr. MANN. I am not complaining about the matter of a claim.

Mr. FERRIS. The Indian Commissioner says the Comptroller of the Treasury refuses to allow the item. The supervisor had the superintendent brought to him rather than to go to her, as a matter of economy, and he thought he was justified in doing it.

Mr. MANN. Why was it necessary to have this done at all? Here was a case where the chief supervisor was ordered to go from Denver, Colo., to Santa Fe for the purpose of having the superintendent of the agency adjust her accounts. Why was that done? Why could not she adjust her accounts by making out her statement and having it transmitted by mail? Why should somebody have to go from Denver to Santa Fe, or wherever it was, to adjust the account? What sort of administration is that?

Mr. FERRIS. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs explained to us that once in so often they journey around to these different agencies, and the accountants examine their books, to the end that there may be no fraud or mistake or money squandered, and it is exceedingly important that that be done. At the different agencies the agents have considerable latitude, and the officers have to do with the moneys of incompetent Indians who can not protect themselves, and in that way it becomes neces-

Mr. MANN. Here is a statement in addition, that after having ordered the chief supervisor to go from Denver to a point in New Mexico to adjust an account, it was necessary to take a financial clerk to assist in the work. Is it true that they have to send around to all of these places occasionally officers to adjust the accounts of the superintendent, or require the superintendent at the agency to go to the office of the chief supervisor to be examined as to the accounts? I should think it was a very cumbersome and expensive method of administration. However, as the woman expended the money, I am not disposed to complain. I withdraw the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance, care, and protection of machinery and irrigation wells already completed, in connection with the irrigation of the lands of the Pima Indians in the vicinity of Sacaton, in the Gila River Indian Reservation, $5,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item of $5,000 is in lieu of an estimate of $15,000, and in lieu of an appropriation of $15,000 carried in the current appropriation bill. As I recollect it, we have spent about $500,000 for the irrigation of the lands of the Pima Indians on the Gila River. There has been some scandal and a great deal of dissatisfaction, and the claim is made that the water is salt, and the Indians have refused to use the wells and have made fun of the electrical devices installed, and the department estimates that it will cost $15,000 to build the additional laterals that must be built before the expenditure of $500,000 can be utilized and to maintain the system. We have on this Indian reservation Pima Indians, who, with their ancestors, have from time immemorial practiced the art of irrigation. We have established there a system which can only be maintained by the employment of highly paid electrical engineers. Whether or no it was wise to install that sort of a plant I am not prepared to say. A committee, of which I am a member, sent a subcommittee down to investigate these matters last summer, but that committee has not as yet reported. We either ought to appropriate $15,000 or nothing at all. There is no rhyme or reason in appropriating $5,000 when the department says that $15,000 is necessary for the building of the additional laterals and the care of the property on which we have expended half a million dollars. Now, we are either going to maintain that enterprise, which cost us half a million dollars, or we are going to let it go to ruin and decay-one or the other. If we are to maintain it, we ought to expend $15,000, and if we are not, let us strike out the appropriation and not spend any money at all there, rather than waste an entirely inadequate sum. I find nothing in the hearings to justify this reduction of the appropriation, although there was some discussion on this point, and in that it differs from almost every other item in the bill. There was some discussion before the committee in regard to this matter. After reading that discussion I am not enlightened as to any good reason for the reduction of the amount in the appropriation, provided it is intended to maintain that expensive plant down on the Gila. I should like to hear from the gentleman from Oklahoma as to the reason for reducing this appropriation.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming complains over the reduction of the appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not complain, I protest. Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman protests as to the reduction of the appropriation from $15,000 to $5,000, apparently without There is nothing in the hearings that discloses the reason. reason, but there was information before the chairman and information before us as a committee, personal in its nature, from the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] in which the members of the committee were unanimous that there is a big dispute as to whether or not the Indians will ever accept the water from these wells. In time gone by the Reclamation Service diverted certain flood waters and waters from the Gila River, which the Indians felt they were entitled to, and gave it to the white settlers. In place of that they dug wells and gave it to the Indians in lieu of the water they had diverted. The expense of running an irrigation plant that comes from wells, from the constant rusting out of the machinery, causes a much larger expense per acre, and the Indians felt that they were mistreated.

The view of the committee was that we ought not to build a system which up to this time the Indians have totally refused to receive until we knew whether or not justice had been done. We have not neglected the question of what was justice in the premises. A board of Army engineers has been appointed, and they are down there investigating as to what is the actual justice in the case. As they have not reported, the committee thought that if we gave $5,000 for some caretaker to keep the machinery painted and oiled and protected, that is all we ought to do for the present, and that was the reason we arrived at the $5,000 appropriation instead of $15,000 for completing a project which might never be used.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last This appropriation heretofore has been reimbursable. I notice that this item now proposes to pay the money out of the Treasury without reimbursement. I suppose we may reach that in a great many cases. How much land is being irrigated at this point now?

Mr. FERRIS. There is none under this project. I will give the gentleman the data, so that he may have it before him. How much is being irrigated on the reserva-Mr. MANN.

I notice the statement is that there are 12,000 acres Mr. FERRIS. There are 4,246 Indians, and 12,000 acres that can be irrigated from these wells if you can get the Indians to use the water.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is in error. The gentleman is reading from the same document that I am holding in my hand. It says 12,000 acres are now being irrigated and 12,000 additional to be supplied by pumping water, and 8,000 acres additional to be supplied with irrigation. How much land is actually being irrigated from this plant?

Mr. FERRIS. There is not any at all being irrigated from this plant. The Indians have a superstition that if they allow the water to be turned onto the land at all from the well system they will abandon their rights to the waters of the Gila River that have been taken away from them.

Mr. MANN. This is, apparently, one of those cases where perhaps the Government has made a mistake. The estimated cost of this plant is something over $50 an acre for the irrigation plant. Now, when the plant is constructed the Indians do not wish to use it. It cost something over a half a million dollars, all of which heretofore has been appropriated to be reimbursable. This bill proposes to appropriate an additional sum without being reimbursable, and that may be correct. If we made a mistake, if we spent a large amount of money there uselessly, we ought not to charge the Indians with that, because they had nothing to do with it.

We ought to charge it to experience or to the men who spent the money. The fact is we went crazy on the irrigation subject, and I am not sure but that we still are. We have been spending large amounts of money out of the Public Treasury without sufficient knowledge or caution. There are some items in this Indian bill which I do not criticize because I guess they could not be left out, where they are liable to have somewhat the same experience that they have had with this proposition.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The criticism of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is undoubtedly a good one, and it should address itself to every Member in this Chamber. Mistakes have been made in irrigation matters, serious ones which have cost the Government lots of money, and there may be some made in this bill. We went into the matter as thoroughly as we could, but we were up against this proposi-tion. We had before us Mr. Newell, head of the Reclamation Service, and also had before us the whole Indian Irrigation We tried as best we could to get information from them, but were up against this difficulty. We found that in Montana and in numerous other States great projects were under way, committing the Government to hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars. We made it our policy from one end of the bill to the other to permit them to begin no new projects, and it is the policy of the committee to try to hold these projects down so that we may complete those we have started in and have gotten so far along with that we are committed to them thoroughly.

In other words, where a project is to cost $500,000 and there have already been expended on the project $350,000 or $450,000, leaving only $50,000 or $60,000 yet to be paid, I think all will concede the folly of abandoning it, for a project once abandoned becomes abandoned in toto. The ditches fill up, and the floodgates destroy the entire system. While I do not expect the different items in this bill to be free from criticism, I think it is about the best we can do under the plan we have already been committed to. And on this proposition, if I may be permitted a word further, I think it is intensely proper that we do not appropriate any more than enough to protect this machinery until the board of Army Engineers tells us exactly what the situation is down there. In other words, we should know whether we have squandered $400,000 or $500,000 in the construction of a plant which the Indians refuse to receive, and which the Indians may well refuse to receive, because the expense per acre is so high that they can not afford to use it. If the Indians refuse to be divested of the headwaters of the Gila River, we ought to at least get the benefit of the best information upon the subject that we can before we commit the Government to any more expenditure. I think the $5,000 is necessary, but I think any more than that would be felly until we know what the trouble is.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the development of a water supply for domestic and stock purposes and for irrigation for nomadic Papago Indians in Pima County, Ariz., $5,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I have no special information as to the necessity for this item. I assume that the sum is probably needed, but I would like to correct the record just a little in regard to a matter that was under discussion a moment ago.

The situation relative to the Gila River is quite sufficiently confused without the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris], who is generally so accurate, further confusing it. He is held to be such an authority on land and water subjects that his statement made a moment ago might involve the Government in serious difficulty if attention were called to it. He said, as I understood him, that the Government had diverted the waters of the Gila River, and that that diversion by the Government, under authority of Congress, had left the Pima Indians without water. The gentleman was not as accurate as usual. The Government has not taken water from the Gila River. velt project, so called, takes water from the Salt River. water which the Pima Indians originally used, and which their forefathers used for many years, was diverted by settlers many years ago. The Indian Office, refusing to make the proper application for Indian rights upon the theory that the Government did not have to bow to a State, allowed the water rights of the Indians to be transferred elsewhere and left them with nothing but the flood waters of the Gila. In building the great plant on the Salt River we developed a large amount of power, and it was suggested that we use some of that power for the purpose of pumping water for the Pimas adjacent to the Gila, instead of doing what the Indians wanted to have done and what a lot of other people wanted to have done, namely, build a great dam on the Gila River, a river that earries more silt than any other river in the world, which in a few years would have filled up. We refused to do that. We did the other thing. Whether it was wise or not I do not know.

I am inclined Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. to think the gentleman is stating more accurately than I did what the situation is, and if I said more than to show that was the contention of the Indians I said what I did not intend to say.

The contention of the Indians is-and I have talked personally with them, they were here last year-that the Federal Government allowed patent to issue and title to these lands and did not properly conserve their interests.

Mr. MONDELL. The settlers diverted the water higher up the stream

Mr. FERRIS. I did not intend to assert anything to be a fact other than their contention, and as a board of Army officers is now investigating, the committee thought we ought to wait.

Mr. MONDELL. The Government is in a way responsible for that, however. If the Indian Office at the proper time had filed with the territorial officials water rights on behalf of the Indians they would have secured them.

Mr. FERRIS. That is exactly what I think the facts are. Mr. MONDELL. I worked with the Indian Office here years age month after month to get them to take out water rights in our State for the benefit of the Indians, in order that they might be protected. Our people did not want to take their water, but the Indians can not sit beside a stream and use water without regard to the forms of law any more than a white man and preserve his rights as against others. The Indian Office finally came down off its high horse and admitted in some respects we had a sovereign State with some reserved powers, and they made application in due form. They could have secured these water rights in Arizona just as well, but the Indian Office refused to do it—took the position that, in some peculiar way, the Indian, as the ward of the Government, has a perpetual right, a proprietary right to the water that flows past his land without regard to the State laws or institutions governing the use of water. This is an illustration of how the department failed to do its duty. Settlers came along, as it was natural for them to do, and diverted the water higher up the stream on better land, and the Indians were left without anything but flood waters, and we are now trying to provide water for their use.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing and completing the construction of the Ganado irrigation project on the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona, in accordance with the plans submitted by the chief engineer of the Indian service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, in conformity with section I of the act approved April 4, 1910, $25,100: Provided, That the total cost of the project shall not exceed $60,100.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if these Indians are the owners of any considerable areas of land? Is there any reason why these Indians should not pay for their reclamation projects?

Mr. FERRIS. I will state to the gentleman there are 30,000 Indians in the Navajo and Moqui Reservations in Arizona and New Mexico, and they have a large reservation. Of course a great deal of it is nonirrigable desert land and without much value.

Mr. MONDELL. But does not the gentleman think it better policy to make this fund reimbursable, even though it never is reimbursed-in other words, have these Indians understand that when the Government builds an irrigation project there is an obligation on their part in connection with it and it is not simply a gratuity, the value of which they fail to realize because it is not costing them anything?

Mr. FERRIS. I will say to the gentleman this project has been appropriated for in former years

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that.

Mr. FERRIS. And it was begun with a specific provision that it should not exceed $60,100, and this $25,100 here appropriated merely enables the Reclamation Service to continue the project which was lawfully begun under a former act. derstand that does not answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman say this project has been begun very long ago?

Mr. FERRIS. I said formerly; this last Congress, I think was.

Mr. MANN. The statement in the hearings here is that nothing has been done but to make the survey.

Mr. FERRIS. I think that is the project on which there has been expended about $35,000.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will find on page 5 it refers to this project-what is the condition of the project; what has been done—a statement that nothing but surveys have been made and they are practically ready now to begin construction.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, the gentleman understands we have to provide money a year in advance so they can go ahead.

Mr. MANN. I was not saying anything about that. saying in regard to whether the project was under way and begun as the gentleman stated.

Mr. FERRIS. I understood that the appropriation of $35,000 had been expended or contracted for.

Mr. MANN. The question as I understand is whether it should be provided that the money should be reimbursed.

Mr. FERRIS. I understood the question of the gentleman, but I was trying to state historically what had happened in connection with this appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems also the discussion developed the question of whether it is advisable to make this appropriation, in view of the fact there is $35,000 now available.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman will agree this money we are appropriating now is, of course, not available until after the end of this fiscal year.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand.

Mr. FERRIS. And that the $35,000 appropriated by the preceding bill will undoubtedly have been consumed by the time this money becomes available.

Mr. MONDELL. I judge not from the statement which has been quoted.

Mr. FERRIS. The engineer explained to us at great length the folly of letting them expend a part of the money for the project and having it washed away before it was completed.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me to make a suggestion, the amount heretofore appropriated is available and probably will be expended by the end of the fiscal year. The $25,100 carried in the present law will complete the project, and if the gentleman will examine the hearing he will discover the engineer of the Indian Office stated it would be economy to make this appropriation and complete the construction of this plant rather than to allow it to go over to another year.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If I have the floor, I certainly will do so.

Mr. MANN. I notice the engineer, in making his statement before the committee, was asked this question: Mr. MANN.

Will the $35,000 which is now available, carried in the last bill, be as much as you can expend in this next fiscal year?

And the answer is:

Not as much as we might expend, but possibly as much as we would. It depends entirely upon the conditions, both the climate and the river. That does not indicate it will be spent during this fiscal year.

Mr. FERRIS. Not necessarily.
Mr. MANN. Well, not probably.
Mr. FERRIS. But it should be available.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the appropriation being made.

Mr. FERRIS. He stated that the idea is that after a work of that kind is started it would not be economical policy for it to be stopped in the middle for lack of funds.

As the gentleman will recall, we put a provision in the appropriation act of 1910 that no irrigation project could be started costing more than $35,000 without authority of Congress. the Congress authorized this project to be constructed, and limited the cost to $60,100, and we are now simply authorizing the money to complete it, the same as we would do with a public building. If Congress, having jurisdiction of the expenditure of the money, should recommend that they should have the

Mr. MANN. Well, but as to the reimbursability. Mr. FERRIS. I think I have something here th I think I have something here that has something to do with the question of reimbursability.

Mr. MANN. And that is the only point.
Mr. FERRIS. The act to which I have reference is the act of April 4, 1910, section 1 of which provides that this shall be reimbursable. I will read the section to the gentleman so that we will have the matter in the RECORD:

we will have the matter in the Record:

For the survey, resurvey, and classification of lands to be allotted in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," and under any other act or acts providing for the survey and allotment of lands in severalty to Indians, including the necessary clerical work incident thereto, and to the issuance of all patents in the field and in the office of Indian Affairs, and to the delivery of trust patents for allotments under said act, or any such act or acts; and for the survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and lands to be allotted to Indians under authority of law, $215,000, to be repaid proportionately out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purpose and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the unexpended balances of all continuing appropriations heretofore made for allotment work, general or specific, are hereby made available for the purposes enumerated herein.

I think this section properly refers to that

I think this section properly refers to that. Mr. MANN. Not at all. The reimbursability was probably the only money recommended in that appropriation.

Mr. FERRIS. But, if I may be pardoned, the act of last year, which began this project, specifically refers to section 1 of that act of April 4, 1910.

Mr. MANN. In what way? The reference is not sufficient. Mr. FERRIS. I will give the gentleman the law of last year.

This is the provision that began this project:

For beginning the construction of the Ganado irrigation project, on the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona, in accordance with the plans submitted by the chief engineer of the Indian service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, in conformity with section 1 of the act approved April 4, 1910, $35.000: Provided, That the total cost of the project shall not exceed $60,000.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that is reimbursable at all. Mr. FERRIS. Does not the gentleman think that when it makes specific reference to a section which is a reimbursable section that makes it reimbursable?

Mr. MANN. Section 1 of the act of 1910——
Mr. FERRIS. It says, "In conformity with that section"——
Mr. MANN. Provides that the money appropriated in that act shall be reimbursable. Now, the same thing is true about the Gila River Reservation, which we have just passed. That question we had up a moment ago. They were asked there in your hearings why that was not made reimbursable and the your hearings why that was not made reimbursable, and the officer in charge said that was already provided by the law of last year. But he was wrong about it, because the law of last year on the subject provides only this:

That the proportion of the cost of irrigation project on the Gila iver Indian Reservation heretofore and herein authorized to be paid om public funds shall be repaid into the Treasury of the United

And so forth.

That does not authorize the reimbursement of a subsequent appropriation.

Mr. FERRIS. I am rather slow to set my judgment up against that of the gentleman from Illinois, and I do not do it now, but only suggest to him that it was undoubtedly the intention of the committee, when this was begun, to make it refer to it and come under that section 1 of the act of 1910; so much so that it specifically refers to it. I can not help but think it is reimbursable.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how the department would construe it, but I am inclined to think that if I were the department I would not think it was reimbursable. It is an easy matter to correct it now or hereafter if the intention is to make it reimbursable.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me make this suggestion, in order to make this perfectly clear; that you add at the end of line 18, page 9, these additional words, "and reimbursable under the terms of that act."

Mr. FERRIS. I have no objection to that at all. It already says that, however. The language of this year says that.

Mr. MONDELL. It does not say "reimbursable."

Mr. FERRIS. It says, "In conformity with section 1 of the act of 1910." If the gentleman wants to insert the word "reimbursable" all right. I have no chieston. act of 1910." If the gentleman wants to insert the word "reimbursable," all right. I have no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I doubt it that act itself makes this reimbursable. I think it would be better to say "and reimbursable," and let it stand there, because I doubt whether that act provides for the reimbursement of any funds excepting the specific amount appropriated.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If such an amendment is put in, I suggest that you add language to the effect that the amount herein appropriated and hereafter appropriated upon this project be reimbursable.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that would be better.
Mr. FERRIS. I have no objection to it; but I repeat, it was the intention of the committee to do it.

Mr. MANN. Let us pass it over for the time being.
Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Wyoming will offer an amendment, and it can be passed later.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make an investigation of the conditions on the western Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona, with respect to the necessity of constructing a bridge across the Moencopi Wash, on said reservation, and also to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit cost for the construction of a suitable bridge at that place, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1913, and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose herein authorized.

Mr. MANN. The Chairman Interest and the state of carbon the

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph is evidently in lieu of an estimate, submitted by the department, of $10,000 for the construction of a bridge. It is now proposed to authorize an investigation of the conditions necessitating the conditions of the condit struction of the bridge, and $1,000 is appropriated, not made reimbursable.

These Indians have large areas of land, and it is proposed to build a bridge on the reservation. Up our way either the Indians build bridges on their reservations or the counties build them. The committee has shown some disposition to oppose the proposition which I presented and which I shall present in a form similar to this a little later on, authorizing an investigation as to the necessity of building bridges and roads at the expense of the Indians on the Wind River Reservation. But here is an investigation proposed as to the necessity of building a bridge on an Indian reservation at public If the Indians do not need the bridge and have no use for it, and it is to be used wholly by the white people, the white people ought to pay for it and not the people of the United States. If, on the other hand, the Indians need the and they own much land, some of it valuable and some of it of little value-they ought to pay for the bridge. In any event, if we build the bridge and make an appropriation ultimately for the building of the bridge we ought to provide that the sums expended should be reimbursable, and that without regard to whether we ever expect to get it back or not. We do expect to get it back, and we ought to get it back, and undoubtedly would get it back as these Indians in the course of years secure enough to pay for it. But in any event they should understand that we are not proposing to construct roads and bridges across their enormous reservation at the expense of the people of the country. It is not a good thing for the Indians. It is not good public policy. It is not defendable from anybody's standpoint. While I shall not insist upon the thousand dollars here appropriated being made reimbursable, I think it ought to be made reimbursable. I think it is all right to examine as to the necessity of building this bridge. Quite likely it is. I do not know anything about it; but the cost of investigation and the cost of building, if it is ultimately to be constructed, ought to be at the expense of the Indians.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes,
Mr. MANN. Is there any reason why the great State of Arizona should not build a bridge for the benefit of its citizens, and pay for it out of its treasury?

Mr. MONDELL. I think there are many reasons why the State can not be expected to build roads and bridges on Indian reservations, even in those cases where the whites make some use of the roads on those Indian reservations. In the first place, the State derives no revenue whatever from these reserva-We are compelled to maintain order upon them within the jurisdiction of the State, and we derive no revenue whatever from them. So far as the bridges and roads are necessary, the Indians ought to pay for them. We ought not to burden the Indians more than their necessities and the necessities of their neighbors require; but, as I look at the matter, the white people on the one hand and the Indians on the other, using the roads and bridges jointly on each other's property, should maintain these roads and bridges, each in his own country, in fair and passable condition. The Indians should not expect the white people to build their roads and bridges, and should not expect the Government to do it. So far as they are necessary for the joint use of the Indians and the white men, they should be paid for by the owners of the property, whether white or Indian.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will yield for a question, want to ask for information if the Indians on these reservations have the right to construct bridges or build roads?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; they own the land. Mr. FERRIS. But they have no money with which to do it. Mr. MONDELL. They own the land, and they can do as they see fit.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the question asked by the gentleman ought to be more fully answered than it has been by the gentle-man from Wyoming. They have the right to build these roads and bridges, but every cent of their money is tied up in trust funds, so that they can not use it.

Mr. MONDELL. A great deal of road building can be accomplished without the expenditure of a considerable amount of cash. It is largely labor.

Mr. McKENZIE. These Indians have no trust fund.

Mr. FERRIS. This is the situation as it was presented in the hearings: The commissioner says these Indians are located about 90 miles from Flagstaff; that this road goes to an Indian school and agency; that a bridge with an 85-foot span has already been constructed, which could be used if the bridge across this wash was built, which it will cost about $10,000 to build. We did not want to take the responsibility of providing for its construction, even although by the expenditure of $10,000 the Indian reservation would have the advantage of the 85-foot bridge, without sending some one out there to make an investi-We have appropriated $1,000 for the purpose of making an investigation to ascertain whether any bridge should be constructed, although the commissioner urged in the strongest terms that it should be constructed.

I find on looking at the property qualifications of these Indians that while they have no trust fund they have property estimated and valued at $2,100,000. If anyone cares to offer an amendment providing that this $1,000 shall be reimbursable, certainly I have no objection to it, although the amount is only $1,000 and it does not construct anything for the Indians. I do not think we ought to construct anything until we see whether it ought to be done or not.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the committee ought to offer such an amendment. The item is so small that probably no other Member of the House will care to offer it. Yet the principle is involved. We ought to establish the principle, and adhere to it, that where the property of the Indians is going to be improved and the Indians are going to be benefited they ought to pay for the improvement. At least we should contemplate the repayment of it by the Indians.

Mr. FERRIS. I think unless some one has an amendment prepared it would hardly be worth while to apply it to this $1,000, but I will say to the gentleman that in dealing with the bridge proper, which may be constructed in the future, that principle ought to be applied.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Oklahoma will permit me to add to his statement another reason for not making an appropriation for a bridge than the one that the gentleman has given and why this item was inserted instead of an appropriation, I will say that it was to ascertain from an engineering standpoint the estimated cost of such bridge. An appropriation might be made for $10,000 and the bridge might not cost more than $100, and therefore, instead of undertaking to appropriate for it, we have asked by this provision that there be submitted an estimated cost.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman states it correctly.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I doubt the advisability of the Government paying for these bridges. Since my distinguished and lovable friend from Arizona came on the floor of the House, representing the State of Arizona, we have had a number of these bridge projects which his predecessor, the distinguished Senator from Arizona, with all his keenness, never was able to unearth in his long service in this House. It strikes me that when the Territory of Arizona was created into a State it assumed some responsibilities. Now, the pretense is that these bridges are for the benefit of the Indian. From the two reports made last year, which have come in, it appears that in the in referring these matters to the engineers of the department main, or at least to a large extent, the bridges proposed are for the benefit of the white man and not merely for the Indian.

Now, the gentleman says that we ought to have this report as to the need of the bridge. The report is already written as to the need of the bridge by the officer who would have to write it; he has already declared himself that they need the bridge. Last year we appropriated for an investigation as to the need of a bridge on the Navajo Indian Reservation, Ship Rock, San Juan River. The officer in charge at Denver, Colo., having been directed to investigate as to the need of the bridge, wired this statement to the officer in charge at the place:

Mail here at once number Indians living south of river, danger of fording, peril when ford is impossible, and any data for use in report justifying need of bridge.

All they asked for was information for a report justifying the need of a bridge. Having been directed to investigate the necessity of a bridge, they directed the officer to send them information which they proposed to incorporate in a report justifying the need of the bridge. That was all they wanted, and that is all they want in this case, if it goes through, for they have concluded that they need the bridge and do not need any investigation to ascertain it; nor do they need any special investigation as to the cost. You can send the length of the investigation as to the cost. You can send the length of the bridge, which is easily ascertained, to any of the bridge companies of this country and obtain offhand the probable cost of a steel bridge, which in the end will be recommended. It will cost between $20,000 and $30,000, and the estimate of the engineer will not add anything to it. Why should not the State of Arizona do something for these people? They live in Arizona, they trade in Arizona, they are the life of Arizona, and yet whenever anything is to be done they want the Federal Treasury to pay the money.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] as to why the State of Arizona should not be compelled to build bridges and roads on the Indian reservations, permit me to suggest to the committee that over one-quarter of the entire area of my State has been set aside for Indian reservations. There are 28,685 square miles of territory in Arizona reserved for the use of the In-That is an area larger than the whole State of West Virginia, and almost as large as the State of Maine or the State of South Carolina. The Indian country in Arizona is equiva-lent in size to any one of these three States. A region rich in minerals, particularly copper and coal, containing vast forests of virgin timber, large areas of irrigable lands, and other larger areas suitable for dry farming and for grazing purposes. All of this domain is not subject to taxation and does not contibute one cent to the upbuilding of my State.

The white people of Arizona on their own land, in that part of Arizona that is not reserved for the Indians, are doing their full share of building roads and bridges. Last year there was raised in my State over $500,000 by direct taxation for the purpose of constructing roads and bridges. The Indians in Arizona contribute nothing to that end. It seems to me that when we consider the vast area of land that has been given to the Indians and the great value of their property, that they ought to contribute in part to the construction of the State highways

I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that any expenditure of this kind should be made reimbursable out of the Indian funds. It is true they have no trust funds now, but ultimately they will have money to their credit, and when they do have it they should pay for any work that is done for their benefit.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly. Mr. MANN. The gentleman is familiar with the two reports made in conformity with the appropriations last year, for two different bridges in Arizona?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. In one of them this statement is made:

Bridges would prove a great convenience to the general public in addition to actual necessity for the use of the Indians.

In the other the statement is made:

Also a convenience to the white people of the valley, who make frequent trips across the reservation to sell their products in towns along the Santa Fe Railroad.

How will the gentleman determine how much of this money, if it is to be reimbursed, shall be reimbursed out of the Indian funds when it appears from the reports that the bridges are largely to be utilized by and for the benefit of the white citizens of Arizona who do not own the Indian lands?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the policy of the committee and having estimates made and plans and specifications prepared has been justified by every report made in accordance with the act last year. In the case of one of the bridges to which the gentlemen refers there was a bill before the committee to appropriate $100,000.

This appropriation was favorably recommended by the department. It turns out that the actual cost in that particular case was $63,500, making a saving of over $35,000. Another bill for a bridge at Yuma had the favorable recommendation of the department and an appropriation of $100,000 was asked for, but when the report of the engineers is made we find that the bridge will cost but $75,000, and the recommendation of the department is that the United States should not bear the entire expense, that only $25,000 could properly be spent on behalf of the Indians. I am not familiar with the conditions at Shiprock, N. Mex., but as far as the Arizona reports are concerned, I believe they amply justify the policy of the committee in ordering these investigations, and that the reports show the extent of the interest of the Indians in the building of these bridges.

Mr. MANN. One of the reports to which I referred was for a bridge at the San Carlos Reservation, Ariz., where the proposition has been to have the Government pay the entire expense, and where it appears it is largely for the benefit of the general public.

Mr. HAYDEN. Not from the reports.

Mr. MANN. I just read it to the gentleman. That is what the report says:

Bridges would prove a great convenience to the general public.

Mr. HAYDEN. That does not mean entirely in the interest of the general public.

Mr. MANN. I will not quibble with the gentleman about the meaning of words. That is what I think it means. Perhaps I am mistaken. Perhaps it would not be to the interest of the general public to have their convenience served. I supposed that it would be.

Mr. HAYDEN. Of course I am quite willing to admit that you can not improve a road or a bridge in the State of Arizona that will not be for the benefit of all the people in Arizona, Indian and white, but as to the measure of benefit, and who should pay the cost, I think it is proper to have these investigations made, and then act according to the reports given to us, unless we have other detailed information to the contrary.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to insist upon the point of order. I do not know why it is, but as to these little thousand-dollar appropriations, at least, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. Hayden] exercises a sort of hypnotic effect upon me. I do not think that that will be the case when the appropriation is over $1,000. Under the circumstances I shall withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think while this matter is under discussion that we ought to have it a little more thoroughly understood. It is true, as the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] says, that it is impossible to construct a bridge or to build a road on any Indian reservation in the country and not have the bridge or the road of some benefit to the general public. For instance, to illustrate the situation, in my State we have an Indian reservation lying wedgewise a very well-settled country, with rivers of considerable size for that country bounding the reservation on either side. The county has constructed the bridges on either side at considerable expense, one end of the approaches of the bridges so constructed resting on the privately-owned land of the county and the other end on the Indian reservation. Under our law we could not tax the people of the State to build a road on the reservation or build a bridge on the reservation, and we ought not to do it if we had authority. The people of the vicinity are taxed for the purpose of building roads and bridges. The Indian owns his own land. There is no reason on earth why he should not be called upon and expected to pay for road and bridge construction upon his own land.

The Indians use the roads and bridges we have built in the adjoining territory and they travel a good deal, many of them. Therefore it is no argument against our building roads and bridges on their reservation that the white people will likewise to a certain extent use those roads and bridges. It is to the advantage of all concerned, Indians and whites, that there should be more or less communication between them, traveling about in the country, and the Indian in my country is perfectly willing to build the bridges and the roads on his own land if we allow him to do it, and I presume that it is true of the Navajos, and there should not be any question of doubt in the mind of any gentleman on this proposition that on an Indian reservation wholly owned or generally owned by the Indians, nontaxable, that the Indians should be expected to build the roads and bridges and maintain them in fair condition. As a matter of fact they should be maintained in as good condition as the roads that join on either side of the reservation.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completion of the construction of necessary channels and laterals for the utilization of water in connection with the pumping plant for irrigation purposes on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, Ariz., as provided in the act of April 4, 1910 (38 Stat. L., p. 273), for the purpose of securing an appropriation of water for the irrigation of approximately 150,000 acres of land and for maintaining and operating the pumping plant, $25,000, reimbursable as provided in said act, and to remain available until expended.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have a committee amendment which I desire to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 17, page 10, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"For the construction of a bridge across the Gila River on the San Carlos Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz., $45,500; and for the construction of a bridge across the San Carlos River on said reservation, in said State, $19,800, both appropriations to be immediately available; said bridges to be constructed across said streams in the places and manner recommended by the Secretary of the Interior in House Document No. 1013, Sixty-second Congress, third session; in all, $65,300, to be reimbursable out of any money that may hereafter be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians having tribal rights on the Fort Apache and San Carlos Indian Reservations."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Will the disposition of this item preclude Mr. MONDELL. the possibility of offering an amendment to the paragraph which has been just read, to which this is an amendment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is an amendment to the entire section.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated that he offered an amendment to the paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To what is the point of order reserved—to the language of the original bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph; this is new matter. I simply desire to be informed whether I could offer an amendment after this matter has been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's amendment? Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send up his amendment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I submt that would be an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph that was read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To the bill or to the amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment being considered, providing it does not preclude my offering an amendment to this paragraph later.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman's amendment is to strike out the last word, and on that I presume the gentle-man desires to speak. I desire to yield, if I can do so, to the gentleman from Arizona to explain the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized. Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to give a brief history of this amendment in order to show that it is not a new proposition, but that it has been well considered.

On April 5, 1911, House bill 1682 was introduced by the then Delegate from Arizona appropriating $100,000 for the construction of these two bridges. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The committee referred the bill to the War Department and to the Department of the Interior for their views. The Secretary of War reported that—

The rivers which it is proposed to bridge have no value as highways of commerce, and I know of no objection to the enactment of the measure from the standpoint of navigation.

The Secretary of the Interior at first recommended that the construction of these bridges be held in abeyance until the controversy over the San Carlos Dam site, then pending in the department, was settled, for the reason that if the bridges were built as then proposed they might be flooded by the waters of the reservoir if constructed. However, on March 25, 1912, the Secretary wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in which he said:

The department would be much pleased to see the proposed legislation enacted into law and an appropriation made available for the construction of the bridges, which would be an important factor in the development of that section of the country.

The Secretary inclosed a report from the superintendent of the San Carlos Indian Agency, in which the agent discussed the construction of the bridge in connection with the San Carlos The dam will be built in a narrow canyon in the mountains just below the junction of the Gila and the San Carlos The original place where these bridges were proposed to be located was near the junction of the two streams, but it was discovered that if the San Carlos Dam were built, they would be flooded by the water in the reservoir, and for this reason sites were selected higher up on each stream. Mr. Lawshe, the Indian agent, says in this letter:

Without the dam these bridges are very desirable; with the dam they become absolute necessities.

If the dam is not built, the construction of the bridges referred to would be, simply, a great benefit to the public and to the Indians, as the rivers are unfordable at certain times in the year, and for considerable periods. If the dam is built, the construction of the bridges becomes an absolute necessity, as the rivers would thereby be made unfordable at all points where road construction is practicable.

On the receipt of this report I immediately took up the mat-ter with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but was informed by the chairman that the committee was without jurisdiction, since both the Gila and the San Carlos are nonnavigable streams.

A similar bill appropriating $100,000 having been introduced by the Delegate from Arizona was referred to the Committee on I went before that committee and was in-Indian Affairs. formed that a rule had been adopted that no construction of this character would be favorably considered by the committee unless surveys had been made and plans, specifications, and an estimate of cost had first been made by the Department of the Interior.

I then introduced a bill providing for a survey and the making of plans and an estimated limit of cost, which bill became a part of the last Indian appropriation act, which is as follows:

a part of the last indian appropriation act, which is as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to make an investigation of the conditions on the White Mountain or San Carlos Indian Reservation in Arizona, with respect to the necessity of constructing, for the use of the Indians, suitable bridges across the San Carlos Creek and the Gila River, in the vicinity of San Carlos, on said reservation.
$1,000, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of cost of construction of said bridges, at such sites as he may select, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912.

As required by the act, the Secretary of the Interior submitted.

As required by the act, the Secretary of the Interior submitted his report to the Speaker of the House of Representatives under date of December 2, 1912. The letter was sent to the Public Printer and I could not obtain a copy of it in time to have the matter considered by the committee at the meeting when the Indian appropriaion bill was reported to the House. The Secretary's report includes a report of the engineer, John Charles, supervisor of construction for the Indian Office, which in part is as follows is as follows:

The San Carlos Agency is located approximately 14 miles west from the confluence of the San Carlos and Gila Rivers. A ford is now found across the Gila River a few hundred feet from this junction, which can not be used with loaded wagons for a period of approximately 120 days in each year on account of high water. The Indians usually ride to the river, leave their teams there, and walk across the railroad bridge to reach the agency during these periods.

In considering the best location for bridges above flow line of the proposed San Carlos Reservoir, it was found necessary to go approximately 6 miles northeast from the San Carlos Railroad station on the Gila and 4 miles northwest on the San Carlos Rivers. These rivers run through adobe and sand formation, and quicksand is found in large quantities in both rivers.

There are approximately 500 Indians living east of San Carlos, who must cross both rivers to reach the agency. The Bylas farming district is located on the south side of the Gila River and east of the proposed bridge site. It is estimated that 4,000 acres of land is available for the use of the Indians in this district. Ditches are now in to cover about 1,400 acres, and 750 acres are platted and will be under cultivation this year. This land is divided up into 118 small farms, ranging from 5 to 10 acres each. This is the largest farming district located on the opposite side of the river from the agency.

He further states:

He further states:

There is a great deal of travel over this reservation, and, while the rivers can be forded when the stage of water is low, there is always some danger of getting into quicksand, especially in the Gila. When the water raises only a little, it is considered very dangerous to attempt to ford this river without a guide. The amount of travel over this part of the reservation is steadily increasing, and the necessity for bridges becomes more apparent each year. Indians ford these rivers when they are extremely dangerous, and it is not uncommon to find teams stick in the quicksands. Some are helped out by others and some are lost.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly. Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. MONDELL. Are the streams across which it is proposed to construct these bridges wholly on the Indian reservation?

Mr. HAYDEN. They are entirely on the Indian reservation. The road across the reservation is 56 miles long, and the bridges are in about the middle of it.

I have a letter here, signed by the governor of the State of Arizona, the chairmen of the boards of supervisors of Gila and Graham Counties, and the mayor of the city of Globe. The communication is dated April 5, 1912, and is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Hon. John H. Stephens, Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

Hon. John H. Stephens,

Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: In reference to House bill No. 19950, being a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct bridges across the San Carlos and Gila Rivers on the White Mountain or San Carlos Indian Reservation, in the State of Arizona, and for other purposes, we desire to call your attention to the following facts:

That owing to the lack of bridge facilities in this vicinity it is impossible for the Indians to ford the Gila and San Carlos Rivers during a number of months of each year. There are large tracts of land susceptible of irrigation and cultivation which lie in the reservation, and if bridges are built the Indians would irrigate and cultivate the same, which would practically make the Apache Indians on this reservation self-sustaining. The Indians have attempted to Irrigate and cultivate these lands at great loss to themselves and the Government because of the fact that their crops had to be abandoned and became an absolute loss, as the crops matured when the rivers were not fordable. If the above-mentioned bridges are constructed, the Indians will be able to irrigate and cultivate these lands, raise crops, be in direct communication with the agency, and be in a position to market their crops and to have their grain ground at the mill established at the agency at San Carlos.

The construction of these bridges will place the Indian agent in closer touch with the Indians than heretofore. He will be able to control them more successfully, give them the benefit of school facilities, and teach them habits of industry, and thus make them self-sustaining.

The bridges will place the matured timber now in said reservation within easy reach, making it possible for the department to market the timber now ready for use. This matured timber will not increase in value because of future growth, and it will be a benefit to the remaining timber upon the reservation to remove such timber and market it, thus creating a large fund fo

I might say in this connection that on page 32 of the hearings there is reported the sale last year of 300,000,000 feet of timber on the Apache Reservation, and the company who desired to make the purchase deposited $5,000 as a bond, which was forfeited to the Government because there were no roads over which they could get into the reservation in order to move the timber out.

The letter says further:

The letter says further:

Owing to the fact that these rivers can not be forded, the agency at San Carlos is now compelled to ship its firewood by rail for a considerable distance. If these bridges were constructed the Indians would cut and haul, by their own labor, all firewood used at the agency, thus giving employment to a considerable number of Indians for several months in the year. This is also true with respect to driving beef cattle to the agency and the obtaining of many of the supplies used at the agency.

If these bridges are constructed it will place the Federal authorities in a position to properly manage and control the Indians in case of disturbances, and give them every opportunity to suppress the iniquitous liquor traffic with this tribe of Indians and to fully enforce all Federal laws relating to Indians and the reservation.

We would call your attention to a letter of January 19, 1911, written by A. L. Lawshe, superintendent of the agency at San Carlos, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and also his telegram of January 22, 1912, addressed to the Indian Commissioner, fully indorsing the construction of the two bridges for the reasons we have recited.

The construction of these bridges will be of great benefit to the United States Government in the transportation of United States troops to and from the various forts in Arizona, and particularly in case of serious outbreaks on the Indian reservation; of great benefit to the State of Arizona and the counties of Glia and Graham in connecting the large mining districts of Globe and Miami, containing a population of 15,000 to 18,000 people, with the large farming community along the Glia River in Graham County, thus giving the farmers in Graham County an opportunity to market their produce in the mining camps at Globe and vicinity, and will give the Indians an additional market for their crops.

Said bridges, if constructed, will be on the State and county road.

Globe and vicinity, and will give the indians an additional their crops.

Said bridges, if constructed, will be on the State and county road passing through said reservation, and of such benefit to the counties of Graham and Gila that said counties have agreed to and will build, maintain, and keep up the 56 miles of road crossing the reservation in order to receive the benefits thereof.

If there is any additional information or data desired by your committee, we will be glad to furnish same.

We urgently request that your committee take immediate action in the matter of the report on the above bill.

Yours, respectfully,

GEO. W. P. Hunt,

Governor of Arizona.

tfully,

GEO. W. P. Hunt.

Governor of Arizona.

David Devore,

Chairman Board of Supervisors, Gila County.

Phil C. Merrill.

Chairman Board of Supervisors, Graham County.

W. W. Brookner.

Acting Mayor, City of Globe.

Now, in conformity with the ideas of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell], you will note that I have made this appropriation reimbursable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYDEN. I believe that this appropriation should be reimbursable out of any moneys that may hereafter be placed to the credit of the Apache Indians in the Treasury of the United States. I am frank to admit that they have no trust funds to their credit at present, but I want to make the prediction here and now that this particular tribe of Indians will in time to come be one of the richest in the United States.

The Fort Apache and San Carlos Indian Reservations contain an area of 5,494 square miles, so that the tribal lands of the Apaches is a little larger in extent than the entire State of Connecticut, and more than twice the size of Delaware and Rhode Island combined. The reservation lies squarely across the great mineral belt that crosses the State of Arizona from the northwest to the southeast. On the eastern edge of the Indian lands lie the Clifton and Morenci mining districts that produced in 1910 metals, principally copper, valued at $9,410,777.83, as shown by the returns required to be made under the Arizona bullion tax law.

On the very western edge of the reservation are the mining districts around Globe and Miami that, according to the same returns, produced $4,407,964.41. These statistics are two years old, but they happen to be the only exact figures that I have at hand. I know that there has been a great increase in the production of copper in all of these mining districts since 1910. I might say, in passing, that the United States Geological Survey for 1911 shows that Arizona produced in that year 303,202,532 pounds of copper, which was 27 per cent of the copper produced in the United States, or over an eighth of all the red metal produced in the world. Under the stimulation of the present high prices it is freely predicted that Arizona's production of copper for 1912 will total 350,000,000 pounds.

Now, I have talked with a number of men who have personally prospected the Apache Reservation, and they all inform me that there is every indication of large bodies of copper ore. I do not believe that there is a mining man in Arizona who is at all familiar with the conditions who would not give it as his opinon that some of the largest copper mines in Arizona will some time be developed within the present boundaries of the Apache Reservation, and the royalties from these mines alone should make the Apaches as rich as any of the Indians of Oklahoma.

As to the timber and agricultural resources of the reservation, if the committee will indulge me for a moment, I will read an extract from the report of the State land commission of Arizona made to the governor on December 1, 1912. The land commission has been traveling all over the State, making a personal appraisement of the school lands and examining other lands with a view to their selection under the grants made to the State by the act admitting Arizona into the Union.

FORT APACHE AND SAN CARLOS INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

"From Sulphur Springs Valley the commission, on its way to Apache and Navajo Counties, where weather conditions were most favorable for expeditions and effective operations, traveled through and over the White Mountains of eastern Arizona, lying in the counties of Gila, Navajo, and Apache. The objective point of this overland trip was Springerville, and the route lay over the ocean-to-ocean highway from Rice, on the Arizona Eastern Railway and San Carlos Creek. From Rice to Springerville the road lies, with the exception of the last few miles, in the Fort Apache and San Carlos Indian Reservations—a body of land which is worthy of at least passing mention.

mention.

"These two reservations constitute a vast and beautiful and inexpressibly rich inland empire, stretching more than 70 miles north and south and east and west, containing 5,494 square miles of territory, or more than three and a half million acres of land. The altitude ranges from the lowlands of the Glia and San Carlos Valleys to the towering heights of the White Mountains, clad with immense forests of pine, cedar, juniper, and quaking aspen, 8,000 feet or more above the level of the sea. The San Carlos Agency is at San Carlos, in the low-lying southern portion, while the Fort Apache Agency is at White River, in the timber-covered mountainous north, and about these agencies and the Rice and Cibicu schools are mainly gathered the 4,545 Apache Indians—men, women, and children—comprising the remnants of many branches of a once famed and bloodthirsty nomadic tribe. At Fort Apache, 3 miles from White River Agency, are stationed two troops of United States Cavalry.

"The potentialities of the empire embraced within the boundaries of these reservations can not be estimated. are they that they may hardly be guessed at. Blessed by nature with scenic beauties of the most fascinating type, and clothed with billions of feet of valuable timber, the mountain valleys and sky-kissed mesas of the highland portion possess agricultural and horticultural possibilities realized by few and by fewer seriously considered. Cut by the White and Black Rivers, which form the Salt, seamed by their numerous forks and tributaries, these mountains form what is perhaps the best watered portion of Arizona. High up as they are, and subject to the rigors in winter of a northern climate, there are numerous protected areas, aggregating many thousands of acres of land, where farming and fruit growing could unquestionably be prosecuted with complete success. Apples, peaches, cherries, and similar fruits would find an almost perfect home, while many varieties of grains and vegetables which thrive best under temperate summer conditions, and are now grown to a certain extent by the desultory Indian farmers, would handsomely reward the husbandman. These things are not possible, of course, while the present boundaries of the Fort Apache and San Carlos Indian Reservation maintain, and the possessors of the arts of civilization are prohibited from availing themselves of the natural advantages here set aside and reserved for the red

As I stated a few moments ago, the State of Arizona is alive to the advantages of good roads. The people of the State have already built three bridges, each one at a cost greater than the cost of these bridges, and there is another bridge being built across the Salt River at Tempe at a cost of $80,000. These bridges are of reinforced concrete, and the work is being done by convict labor. As soon as the Salt River bridge is completed the construction gang will go to another place to continue the work there. Under the direction of the State engineer a system of State highways has been planned and many miles of good roads have been built.

It has been proposed by the goods roads association of the State that the next legislature, which will meet this month, shall provide for a bond issue of $5,000,000 for the construction of roads and bridges. From all I can learn from the press of the State that proposition is meeting with favorable consideration. It is in the line of work that has been done in California and the other Western States in the good-roads movement.

I am not now complaining about the great area of my State that has been turned over to the Indians. The United States has given them their reservations, which belong to them, and I do not want to take an acre away from them without just compensation.

It is now their land, and I am willing to assist them in making the best possible use of it, because I realize that no part of Arizona can prosper without benefiting the whole State. The Indian lands would still be a valueless wilderness if the remainder of Arizona had never been settled by the white people, It is the coming of the white people that has made valuable the timber, the coal, the copper deposits, and the agricultural lands that are now the property of the Indians.

On the other hand the development of the great natural resources of the Indian country is bound to add to the material prosperity of the white people in Arizona. The Indian and the white man have a common heritage, and it is only by the development of the whole of Arizona that all of her people, red and white alike, can find true prosperity.

All of this being true, my people are united in the opinion that the Indian should do his share in at least building the roads and bridges where the main highways cross the reservations. The Indian can not expect to enjoy all of the benefits of civilization without hearing some of its burdens.

tion without bearing some of its burdens.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask that the gentleman from Arizona have five minutes more, if he desires it, for the purpose of explaining the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Arizona be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYDEN. I hope that I will not take that much time, Mr. Chairman. As I say, I think the Indians ought to do their share in building up the good roads of the State. There is no better way in which to improve a country than to build roads and bridges. That is one of the best ways I know of in which to expend public funds. The construction of these particular bridges will benefit the Indians in opening up the country so that the timber, coal, and copper there will be worth something. This reservation would be worthless, as it was before the advent of the white people, except for the fact that the whole surrounding country has been settled by white people, which makes a market for the material things that the Indians own. And as the Indians will get the benefit of the increased value which comes from the settlement of the country by white people, a part of that value ought to go into the improving of roads and the building of bridges for the common benefit of all the people of the State.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will allow me to ask him a question, is the State of Arizona in a financial condition to put in these bridges at its own expense, or to furnish a part of the money at this time, owing to the fact that it is a new State and in an undeveloped condition?

Mr. HAYDEN. The State of Arizona is in a financial condition to do any necessary bridge and road work. I do not think there will be any difficulty about the State doing its share.

In the case of the Yuma bridge the interest of the Indians in its construction across the Colorado River amounts to one-third of the cost. Under the circumstances the State of California should pay one-third of the cost and the State of Arizona onethird. In the case of the Gila and San Carlos bridges it is shown by the reports, and there is no evidence to the contrary, that the work is primarily of the greatest benefit to the Indians, of more benefit to them than to anybody else, and the benefit to the State is only incidental. The benefit to the State is in having a through road across the reservation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the distance across the San Carlos Indian Reservation at the point where the bridges are to be built?

Mr. HAYDEN. Fifty-six miles from where you enter the reservation to where you come out of it, and the bridge is about half way between the two points.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How far are the streams apart where these bridges are to be built?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not know how far it is across the neck of land, but I suppose it is 4 or 5 miles.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then the persons to be immediately benefited would be the Indians, who now have the land and have 100 settlements of farms, and so forth?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; those facts are shown in the report, although I have no personal knowledge of them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman personal knowledge as to the time that would be saved by these bridges? Mr. HAYDEN. I never have crossed the Gila River at the San Carlos Crossing but once, and at that time there was about 2 feet of water in it, but there were quicksands enough to stop an automobile for half a day. There is more danger from quicksands than from anything else. But it is a torrential stream, liable to rise in a few hours and become unfordable.

Mr. TILSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.
Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has said that it is about 50 miles across the reservation one way, and that the bridge is about in the center. Will the gentleman state as to the other direction, how far across it is and how near the bridge is to the

Mr. HAYDEN. The reservation is about 70 miles across each way—approximately square. The line of road cuts the west boundary, dropping to the south, and then goes farther east and leaves the reservation about the middle of the south boundary.

Mr. TILSON. How near is the bridge to the boundary? Mr. HAYDEN. It is about 30 miles from Globe to San Carlos, where the bridges are located. It is about 25 miles to where the road leaves the other side of the reservation.

Mr. TILSON. It is well within the reservation? Mr. HAYDEN. Yes, indeed.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will.

Mr. MANN. How large an appropriation does the amendment

Mr. HAYDEN. Sixty-five thousand three hundred dollars.

For how many bridges?

Mr. HAYDEN. Two.

Mr. MANN. Both on the San Carlos?

Mr. HAYDEN. One across the San Carlos and one across the

Mr. MANN. Where does the gentleman get his figures for the estimated cost?

Mr. HAYDEN. On page 4 of the report. The estimate of the bridge across the San Carlos is $19,800; across the Gila River, $45,500.

Mr. MANN. That is the basis of the gentleman's estimate?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to say how much land there is on the off side of the river which requires the bridge across the Gila River?

Mr. HAYDEN. According to the report there are 4,000 acres of irrigable land on the south side of the stream, and of that amount 1,400 acres is now ready for cultivation.

Mr. MANN. There is, I believe, a proposition to erect a dam there, is there not?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.
Mr. MANN. How much of the 4,000 acres will be submerged if the San Carlos Dam is constructed?

Mr. HAYDEN. According to the report, the way I read it, these particular 4,000 acres, being located upon the south side of the Gila and above the junction of the two streams, would not be flooded, but could be used to create farms for the In-dians whose farms might be flooded lower down near the reservoir.

Mr. MANN. How does the gentleman figure that out from the report? In the instructions we gave the engineers they were directed to locate the bridge so that the dam could be thereafter constructed and the bridge would not be under water.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What is there in the report that indicates that the 4,000 acres would not be submerged?

Mr. HAYDEN. I may be drawing on my knowledge of the geography of the country. Mr. MANN. Or on the

Mr. MANN. Or on the imagination.
Mr. HAYDEN. If the gentleman would permit me to draw on my imagination on the floor of the House, I might.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said that he had no personal knowledge of this situation.

Mr. HAYDEN. Except by traveling across the reservation once.
Mr. MANN. The report says there are 4,000 acres of land, of which 1,400 have been and 700 more are being platted, and this land is divided into 118 small farms.

And immediately following that:

The construction of the proposed San Carlos Dam would submerge valuable land below the agency, and many Indian families will be compelled to find homes elsewhere. The amount of land that would be submerged and the number of Indians that would be disturbed are unknown to me.

The two are in that conjunction which would lead one not personally familiar with the physical condition there to suppose they related to the same matter.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Gila River flows westward-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five minutes. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYDEN. This report states that these 4,000 acres of land are located east of the proposed site of the bridge. The river flows to the west. And if the bridge is located far enough upstream not to be submerged and this land is still to the east of the bridge, then the land naturally will not be submerged, because the basin of the reservoir is located lower down the

That would bring one to the consideration of Mr. MANN. where the bridge is to be located. The gentleman says these 4,000 acres are east of the site of the bridge. Where is the bridge to be located?

Mr. HAYDEN. Six miles above the junction of the San Carlos and the Gila.

Mr. MANN. There are two bridges—and where else? I notice the report says 4 miles northeast of the San Carlos River. The gentleman says that the property just east of the San Carlos is east of the bridge. The report of the Secretary of the Interior says that the bridge will be 4 miles north-east of the San Carlos River. In order to assist the gentleman's recollection as to the physical condition of the ground there, I will state it is true that the Secretary of the Interior locates the bridge 4 miles northeast of the San Carlos and the supervision of construction locates it 4 miles northwest of the San Carlos. I do not undertake to say where it is to be between these two points, 8 miles apart.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the gentleman will pardon me, there are two bridges.

Mr. MANN. I am talking about one bridge. It is true there are to be two bridges. I am talking about one bridge. Where is it to be?

Mr. HAYDEN. The engineer who was on the ground says:

In considering the best location for bridges above flow line of the proposed San Carlos Reservoir, it was found necessary to go approximately 6 miles northeast from the San Carlos railroad station on the Gila and 4 miles northwest on the San Carlos River.

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me, reading from the Secretary of the Interior, he says:

Therefore, in considering the best location for bridges above the flood line of the proposed San Carlos Reservoir, it was found necessary to go approximately 6 miles northeast of the San Carlos railroad station on the Gila and 4 miles northeast on the San Carlos River.

Mr. HAYDEN. Perhaps the Secretary of the Interior is in the same situation that I was when I first came to Washington. I have hardly yet found out which way is north. He may be suffering from the same sort of trouble.

Mr. MANN. But this is not a question of north. cases they located it north, but one says northeast and the other says northwest. I was trying to discover from the gentleman, who says he has been there, where the bridge is to be, especially in connection with this submerged land. With reports that the land that is now used by these Indians is likely to be submerged, and the Indians permanently removed, what is the object of building a bridge for their special accommodation?

Mr. HAYDEN. On the San Carlos River above the proposed bridge is the farming country of the Indians, and on the Gila River above the proposed bridge is the farming country of the Indians, and in order that these people may get together and go to the agency when the streams are high it is necessary that these two bridges be constructed; otherwise the reservation would be divided into three parts-that part which lies to the west of San Carlos, that part which lies in between the two streams, and that part south of the Gila.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to tell the House whether these Indians themselves have been consulted in reference to spending their money in the construction of a bridge partly for their use and partly for the use of the general public?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have no knowledge of anything having been submitted to the Indians.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that if we are to build bridges for the use of certain people at some places at their expense that it will be just as well to know something about what they think about it?

Mr. HAYDEN. Well, I do not know that it has ever been the custom for the Indian Office to refer matters of this kind to the Indians. We are supposed, as their guardians, to know what is best for their interest and to act accordingly.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it has been the custom. almost invariably in matters of this kind the superintendent who makes the report obtains or purports to obtain information as to the opinion of the Indians.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is nothing in this record on that subject.

Mr. MANN. I see there is nothing in this record on the subject. It might be these Indians would like to have this bridge built out of the Federal Treasury, because it would, at least, give some work to them. It might be that they would like to have it built at their own expense. It is quite certain that the white people who trade with them would be glad to have it built either out of the Federal Treasury or at the expense of the Indians if none of it comes out of their pockets; but does not the gentleman think we ought to consult the Indians somewhat as to whether we will use their funds to do something for their special good?

Mr. HAYDEN. They have no tribal funds at the present

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order. I think it has been shown clearly here that these Indians would be greatly benefited if they had these bridges, and unless money is spent by the United States Government for the purpose of building these bridges and developing their lands they will remain there for hundreds of years, possibly, as they have in the past. it has been shown that it would be for the benefit of the Indians, that it would be for the benefit of the State and for the benefit of the white people of that country that these bridges and dams should be built in order that that land can be irrigated and the country developed. I desire to say, further, it is quite a hard matter to get a bill through separately. We could not now; we would have to wait until next year before anything can be done. The Government has been amply protected. We have spent a thousand dollars in having this examination made. It is perfectly satisfactory to the department, perfectly satisfactory to the Indian agent, and therefore why should not the gentleman be willing that this small amount of money be expended for the benefit of the Indians that will help them immensely in the future? It has been stated by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. Hayden]—and I have been in that country and know his statement to be true—that this tribe will probably be the wealthiest tribe of Indians in the United States, and that undeveloped country will never be developed unless we build bridges and open up canals and irrigation projects. Every dollar is reimbursable; nothing comes out of the Treasury of the United States in the end but what will be reimbursed. We have constituted ourselves the guardians of these Indians, and as their guardians I feel it is our duty to protect them by giving them this small amount of their own money to build bridges for themselves.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think likely what the gentleman says may be true, and yet before we expend their money for this purpose I think it would be advisable to know what they think about it. I doubt whether the amendment would make it reimbursable.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If there is any question, I will let the gentleman amend the amendment so there will be no question about it.

Mr. MANN. I heard the amendment read. I would have no objection to building bridges reimbursable out of the funds of the Indians, recommended by the Indian officers, which was agreeable to the Indians themselves, who proposed to use the However, Mr. Chairman, I think the item is subject to the point of order. There is no authorization for the bridge. There was in the last year's bill an item similar to the one which was embodied in the bill a few moments ago, providing for a survey and an estimate of cost, but it has been the ruling always that that did not commit the Government to a project, so that it is not a work in construction. There is no authoriza-tion of law, and no one pretends there is, for the construction of this bridge. I do not know whether the Chair cares to hear further on the subject or not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to state simply that we only authorized the plans and specifications to be made, the estimated, and the matter was referred back to the House for further action, and we now have acted upon it and asked for this appropriation, as the Government is the general guardian for these Indians; and as there has been an Indian Bureau created under the act of 1832, the President of the United States and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have the right to control, where they see proper, these Indian matters of every kind and character, and it seems that would be within our province, after we have gone to the trouble of having these surveys made and the estimates made, and determine the necessity for the purchase, as we have done. It has all been agreed on, and we should have the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Government has the largest control in relation to the Indian funds and Indian appropriations. So far as the House is concerned, it must stand by its rules, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing in full some of the letters to which I referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill, under the head of "California," on page 10, commencing with line 18, and on page 11, from line 1 to 7, inclusive, be passed for to-day, and that it be taken up at the next meeting of the committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman refers to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; this committee here, which is now considering the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to passing that part until we reach the close of the bill, but in the event of closing to-day we could take it up at the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. A portion of the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is that the part indicated by him shall be passed without prejudice for the present.

Mr. CARTER. Does that include the entire State?
Mr. RAKER. It includes it, as I understand, down to the word "Florida," line 8, on page 11.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I will ask the chairman of the committee what his disposition is? I notice the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] first asked to have the California items passed for the day. man from Texas [Mr. Stephens] suggested that they pass to the end of the bill, which, of course, is perfectly agreeable. Will the gentleman let me know how long he intends to keep the House in session?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have a faint hope that we will get through with this bill to-day.

Mr. MANN. That may be true. But how long will the committee remain in session?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That will be subject to the wish of the committee.

Mr. MANN. I know. But we might stay here until 12 o'clock to-night. What I want to know is whether the gentleman intends to keep the House in session longer on Saturday night than formerly?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Oh, I think not.

Mr. MANN. It does not look to me, from the number of items in which myself and others are interested in this bill, that it is practical to finish the bill to-day by 5 o'clock.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We can certainly do something Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

on the bill.

Mr. MANN. There will be no objection to that. I simply wanted to know the disposition of the gentleman about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. Raken] is that the items as to California, down to the word "Florida," page 11, line 8, may be passed until the balance of the bill is completed, and that then the California items may be taken up for consideration. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there has nothing been read since the California items have been passed. We have reached "Florida" and none of the items have been read.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the situation. But I made inquiry of the Chair whether the disposition of the matter just referred to would preclude my offering an amendment taking up the Wyoming item?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the situation, which is as indicated by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] After we have disposed of the part referred to, the Chair will certainly, in pursuance of what he stated, recognize the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee why the committee failed to insert in the bill an item contained in the estimates for the continuation of the construction of dikes and other protection for allotments on the Fort Mohave Reservation.

There would seem to be quite as urgent reasons for that particular item as for any of the items that are contained in the bill. It seems that the Cotton Land & Irrigation Co.-I get this from a hurried reading of the statement made by the commissioner-furnished the Government with the water rights of a certain acreage, 1,000 acres, it is stated, in lieu of a right of way across the reservation. That would seem on its face to be a rather liberal proposition, favorable to the Indians and the Government. Now, it has been discovered that the lands over which the water right is thus acquired are subject to overflow, and therefore the water right can not be utilized, because at times there is too much water coming from the rise of the river, and there is the necessity of building dikes for the purpose of protecting the lands to be irrigated, the water right for which is already acquired, from the rise of the river. Now, that would seem to be a mighty important thing.

Mr. STEPHENS af Texas. I think the gentleman has got the wrong idea here. I think the item under consideration begins on line 7 of page 10:

For completion of the construction of necessary channels and laterals for the utilization of water in connection with the pumping plant for irrigation purposes on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, Ariz.

Mr. MONDELL. My inquiry was why the committee in its wisdom-I assume it was in its wisdom, and I hope not in its lack of wisdom-failed to insert the item in the bill which I have just read. It occurs in the Book of Estimates just before the item to which my formal motion was made. The item was Why? left out.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Because we did not think we were justified in inserting that item without information from the irrigation engineers and the parties in charge of the work on that reservation.

Mr. MONDELL. From a rather hurried reading of the statement, it seems to me quite clear that the Indians can not use the water rights they already have. This is exceedingly im-The department wants to secure an appropriation for these Indians. The department has been rather derelict in its duty in that regard in the past-not the recent past-and I am glad they are proposing to do this in this case. They ought to have the money necessary. The department does not ask much, but whatever is necessary they ought to have. They already have this 1,000 acres of land with the water right. river rises and overflows the land. The water recedes, the land dries out, and the ditches are gone. They want some dikes to hold back the inundating floods. They want to appropriate some more water, and, of course, they will have to make surveys and prepare maps and plans in order to meet the requirements of the State engineer's office, and all that, and all that costs money.

Now, there is something said about the purchase of additional water rights at $25 an acre. The committee may have some question as to the advisability of doing that, but the commissioner calls attention to the fact that the sum he seeks is primarily for the purpose I have indicated—that of building the dikes and acquiring the necessary water rights.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And they are asking for 1,000

We were not willing to go into that.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, assuming that the committee was not prepared to have that done, surely that would not justify the denial of the request for sufficient money to build small dikes and to secure some water rights-in other words, to clinch what the Government now has and make it available for use.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] complains that we left out here a $50,000 item,

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman should not reiterate the statement that I complained. I inquired in this case. I protested in the other.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, let it go at that. The gentleman inquired. I do not care to be technical about it. I do not want to misrepresent the gentleman. This calls for a new project of 1,000 acres of irrigable land, and it calls for a pumping plant. We have had a serious experience with pumping-plant projects down there, because the price per acre is more than the lessees are willing to pay, and the money is expended without getting anything of value in return. Now let me read what the department says:

This item should be a nonreimbursable appropriation. These Indians have but little assistance from the Government and are practically destitute and without resources. Great destruction has been done to their lands by the encroachment of the Colorado River.

Now, here is his estimate:

It is estimated that at a cost of $35,000 water can be pumped onto 1,000 acres of irrigable land on the Nevada side of the river, and it is proposed that $20,000 be used during the fiscal year 1914 to make a start on this work.

Now the facts are these: They get 1,000 acres of land irrigated from this Cotton Land Development Co. free. It costs the Government nothing. It costs the Indians nothing. afforded them by the company for the use of the water. We thought that that in all probability was as much or more than they would utilize and more than they would farm, and we did not want to launch out on a new project, on a pumping plant, which in all probability would cost so much that it would be prohibitive. The Director of the Reclamation Service, Mr. Newell, explained to us, not once but on nearly every one of these items, that where you have to lift the water out of the earth, the wear and tear of machinery and the rusting out and deterioration of the machinery makes the expense so high that it is often prohibitive.

The Indians do not farm as much in reality as this legislation and this justification would oftentimes indicate. The real truth about it is that a good deal of this land that is being irrigated at the expense of the Government is being used by lessees of the Indians, who do the work for them. And, being constantly criticized by the House and by nearly everyone as we have been, we did not want to commit the Government to any new project, and that is the reason we left out the item for $35,000.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, the beginning of the item is for continuing the construction of dikes and their protection, and attention is called to the fact that a continuation of the construction of these dikes is necessary to protect the land already irrigated, to what extent I do not know, but there is essentially a continuing expenditure. Then there is the part for securing an additional appropriation. Now, I agree entirely with the gentleman as to that part of the amendment which proposes new construction. I think that feature is probably questionable, but I think that the committee must have made a mistake in striking out the entire item, because there is a part of that expenditure which it seems to me is entirely

Mr. FERRIS. We gave them $25,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Last year. Mr. FERRIS. We gave them $25,000 this year.

No; you did not give them anything. The Mr. MONDELL.

item is not in the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. We gave them the same amount that we gave them last year. The thing the gentleman complains of is that we did not launch out on a new project costing $35,000, which the Indian Office says must be nonreimbursable, so we will have o opportunity ever to reimburse it.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman is mistaken. This item was in the appropriation bill at $25,000 last year.

Mr. FERRIS. We have it in the bill now, on page 10, lines

7 to 17, at $25,000:

For completion of the construction of necessary channels and laterals for the utilization of water in connection with the pumping plant for irrigation purposes on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, Arlz., as provided in the act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stats, L., p. 273), for the purpose of securing an appropriation of water for the irrigation of approximately 150,000 acres of land and for maintaining and operating the pumping plant, $25,000, relmbursable as provided in said act, and to remain available until expended.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not talking about the Colorado Indian Reservation item at all.

Mr. FERRIS. What item is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. MONDELL. About the item in the Book of Estimates above that. That is not in the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. That is a new item entirely. It was not in the bill last year.

Mr. MONDELL. Then the Book of Estimates is in error. Mr. FERRIS. The Book of Estimates does not contain what was in the bill last year. It merely contains what the department suggested.

Mr. MONDELL. The Book of Estimates contains the statement of what was in the bill last year.

Mr. FERRIS. This was not in the bill last year.

Mr. MONDELL. What I refer to is the act of August 24, 1912. volume 37, page 533, section 25, $25,000. I do not know whether that is the same item or not, but the Book of Estimates indicates that this item was in the bill last year for $25,000.

Mr. FERRIS. It was in the bill last year and it is in the bill this year. There is nothing left out of the bill this year that was in last year. We merely refused to put new stuff in.

Mr. MONDELL. Where?

Mr. FERRIS. In the same place, beginning with line 7, on page 10, and ending with line 17, on page 10.

Mr. MONDELL. On the contrary, the item that the gentleman refers to is an entirely different item. I am talking about the Mojave Reservation item. The gentleman is talking about the Colorado River Indian Reservation. I am talking about an item that is not in the bill, but which is in the Book of Esti-

Mr. FERRIS. We did not allow the item.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman stated that it was in the

Mr. FERRIS. It is not. Last year the bill carried this language: "For continuing the construction of dikes or other protection for the allotments on the Fort Mojave Reservation, $25,000." That was to build dikes to be constructed for the benefit of the Fort Mojave Indians. The Indian Committee investigated that fully and believed that the $25,000 was sufficient for continuing the construction of the dikes. But the department sought a new section, and they inserted another item in the bottom of the bill they sent to us, reading in this way, "To purchase additional water rights for $50,000"; and the matter with the commissioner.

that is the reason why we did not insert it, because they wanted to put in a thousand acres more, costing $50,000 for the new project, and that is the reason we did not grant it.

The Clerk read as follows:

FLORIDA.

Sec. 4. The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $10,000 "for relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, and for purposes of their civilization," made in the Indian appropriation act approved March 3, 1911, is hereby reappropriated and made available.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring why the committee left out the three last items in the Book of Estimates following the item we have just passed, the last item on page 10.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have just read the item relative to Florida.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that we have, but I desire to ask about an item not in the bill. I assume that I can make that inquiry as well after the Florida item was read as I could after the reading of any other item, because these items would have been in the bill before we reached the Florida item, but as they were not in the bill I could not call attention to an item that was not read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What item does the gentleman

Mr. MONDELL. I will read them:

For the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the provisions of the sixth article of the treaty of June 8, 1868, between the United States and the Navajo Nation or Tribe of Indians proclaimed August 12, 1868, whereby the United States agrees to provide school facilities for the children of the Navajo Tribe of Indians, the sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But, Mr. Chairman, we have passed Arizona to which those items relate.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but I rose to ask a question of the chairman why the committee in its wisdom left the item out, and also another item following it, the water supply for the Navajo Indians, $100,000. And another item for enlarging the irrigation system for the protection and irrigation of Indian lands within the Camp McDowell Indian Reservation, Ariz., $30,000. These two last items are new items, but the first item I read is an item proposing to carry out a treaty stipulation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to answer the gentleman fully. I presume the Committee on Indian Affairs has the right to legislate by adopting the legislation asked for of the House by the department, or we have the right to reject it, and we saw proper to reject it. That is the only statement I can

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that the gentleman's committee saw fit to reject it, but is it not proper for me to ask the chair-man for the reasons that led the committee to reject it? Did they investigate it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We investigated every item presented to us, and after a full examination of this matter we thought that we could not afford at the present time and under present conditions to allow these matters to creep into the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not understand how the committee could well refuse to take action in regard to this matter, and I can not find anything in the hearings to indicate that the committee went into it at any length.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not know that we are responsible to the gentleman from Wyoming for our action. thought we were responsible to the House and that we were justified in not reporting the items.

Mr. MONDELL. If the chairman of the committee does not want to answer

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have answered the gentleman as fully as I can.

Mr. MONDELL. Why, he can do so. He is not responsible

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am not responsible for the committee I preside over except as one of its members.

Mr. MONDELL. I deem it my duty to be informed as to these matters, and I simply asked a question, which I think is a very proper question, why the committee saw fit to leave these items out of the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will again make as succinct an answer as I can. We did not think the condition of the Treasury justified us in making these appropriations at this time, and the committee was of the unanimous opinion that they should not now be granted.

Mr. MONDELL. You did not think it necessary to discuss

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Oh, there were hearings on every We had the commissioner and the clerks before us, both the chief clerk and the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs. If the gentleman will turn to pages 56, 57, and 58 of the printed hearings of this session he will find that matter fully discussed, and I do not think it is necessary to discuss it again on this floor.

Mr. MONDELL. There was very little inquiry with regard to the Camp McDowell matter, and that is a matter that has been agitated a good deal in the past year.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will refer the gentleman to the printed hearings and the statements I made. I think that is a sufficient answer.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman may consider it sufficient. It does not seem to me there is any sufficient answer in the hearings as printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] a question, hoping I will get more information than the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] obtained by his question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me, will let the gentleman read in his own time the reasons given by the committee why they did not permit those three items to

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas and myself have very different ideas of the duties of a man in charge of a bill. When the gentleman in charge of a bill is asked a question in regard to the bill, I have never understood that it was a sufficient answer to reply "Read the hearings," because everybody knows every Member of the House can not read the hearings before all the committees. It is expected that when a gentleman in charge of a bill has had hearings and is asked a question on the floor of the House that he will be able to tell in a succinct way the substance of his position and what is in the hearings, without advising the gentleman asking the question to go and read the hearings, which in this case were only recently printed, and in any event were never had before the full committee. Those hearings were had before only three members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which is an outrageous way of conducting a hearing.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We had the stenographic report from the reporters after it had been written out in full before the full committee, and any member of the committee could take up those reports and have them fully investigated.

Mr. MANN. How could any member take up a stenographic report and do that, with only one copy of the report for a committee of how many members?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We had three copies,

Mr. MANN. The bill was reported before anybody had a chance to read the report, and, as the gentleman stated once before on the floor of the House, before the stenographic report had been transcribed. It had not been printed, because it had not been transcribed.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. No; because I want to ask a question about the this $10,000 for the Florida Indians, where it is now proposed to reappropriate the unexpended balance? Has any one cent of it ever been paid to any Florida Indian?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will refer the gentleman to the top of page 61 of the hearings:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $10,000 "for relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, and for purposes of their civilization," made in the Indian appropriation act approved March 3, 1911, is hereby reappropriated and made available.

The Indians of Florida are becoming less and less able to provide for themselves from revenues derived from hunting and fishing, which is practically the only occupation they know, owing to the reclaiming of the Everglades. They have been slow to accept the aid of the Government, although land has been provided for them, which it is expected they will settle upon and improve when their present haunts are made to disappear. They are not citizens of the State of Florida, and Inasmuch as their situation is liable to become acute at any time funds should be available for their relief.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is in the Book of Estimates, and I read that before the bill had been reported. It is just as well to put it in here, but that does not answer the question. Two or three years ago we appropriated $10,000 for the support and maintenance of Indians in Florida. Last year we reappropriated the unexpended balance. It is now proposed to reappropriate the unexpended balance. How much is the unexpended balance?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have it right here.

Mr. MANN. How much of the money that has been expended has been paid to the Indians and how much has been used by the department?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There was $154 expended for the purpose of investigating this matter, leaving a balance of $9,846 out of the $10,000. Here is an analysis. Salaries and wages $100, traveling expenses $54, total $154. Taking that from $10,000 it leaves a balance of $9,846.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman's arithmetic is correct. Now, for two years we have carried this appropriation for the support of Indians in Florida. The temptation has not proven beyond the control of the gentleman in charge of the Indian Office. There never was any occasion for appropriating one cent for those Indians. I tried to persuade the House to that effect when we made the first appropriation, but the Committee on Appropriations represented how much money we would have to expend to keep these Indians there from starving to death. They had the money two years and have not expended one cent except $154 for some gentleman to take a nice trip to Florida during the wintertime.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN. I always yield.

Mr. FERRIS. I desire to say to the gentleman that the President has really taken some steps. These Indians in the Everglades are as wild as rabbits, and up to this time they have not been able to do anything with them, but the President has by Executive order set aside a tract of land comprising 85,000 acres and the Indian Office has tried to get these Indians on it, tried to get hold of them, lasso them, or catch them in some other way, and put them on it.

Mr. MANN. This talk about the Indians being so wild is all fudge.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, the Indian Office does not say so.

Mr. MANN. What do they know about it? Mr. FERRIS. They have been down there.

Mr. MANN. They sent one man on a winter trip, at a cost of $154; that is all they know about it. They do not know anything about it. There never was any occasion for the Government spending a cent on these Indians down there; they are not asking it.

Mr. FERRIS. They have not got sense enough to ask any-

Mr. MANN. The gentleman need not be alarmed; they have got a great deal more sense than some of the native crackers of Florida and are quite able to take care of themselves; they are pretty bright people down there.

Mr. FERRIS. They are the wildest Indians in the United States, whatever the gentleman says.

But the gentleman knows people who are so Mr. MANN. wild usually do not live down in that hot climate around the water: they are not so wild.

Mr. FERRIS. Just one word further. They have not spent but $154 up to this time, so it has not been costing the Government very much.

Mr. MANN. No; it has not been costing the Government; that is true. But is that a reason for making the appropriation?

Mr. FERRIS. As long as the President has set reservation of 80,000 acres and as long as the Indian Office was trying in good faith to get the Indians on it, it seems to me it is not too much to follow up the judgment of two prior Congresses which have set aside $10,000 to be expended for that purpose and which up to this time has not been spent. It does not carry anything, but is merely a reappropriation.

Mr. MANN. I understand you do not include it in the total appropriation where it belongs. You do not call it part of the appropriation bill, although in fact it really is.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, it would not be necessary, I think, to have an appropriation for investigation of the Seminole Indians of Florida unless something is accomplished toward draining the Everglades.

I have made trips through Florida both ways, north and south and east and west, and met a good many of these Indians. found very few of them able to speak any English at all. While they may not be classed as wild Indians they are certainly primitive Indians and know very little about the white man's way of sustaining themselves.

Originally they owned the State of Florida and perhaps a portion of some of the surrounding States. They have been driven back and narrowed down now to the Everglades. If the Everglades are drained and inhabited by the white man, then some place must be found on which they can make their existence, because the Everglades no longer belong to them legally, and as this work progresses there is going to be some necessity for an investigation of the condition of these people to find out just what should be done with them and just what can be done for them, and for that reason I think this appropriation of $10,000 should remain in the bill until it is made use of for their benefit or until a final investigation of the question is made by the department.

Mr. AUSTIN. How many are there? Mr. CARTER. One of the purposes of this investigation is to find out the number of Indians and to enroll them.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would not the census report of Florida show

Mr. CARTER. A census report never shows conclusively the exact number of any people of any nationality. It shows in a general way, but does not show as definitely as would be necessary for allotment purposes or for support and civilization. I think there are about 400 of them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A great many of these Indians drift into Miami and St. Augustine and Jacksonville. They drift out of the Everglades and go into these cities.

Mr. CARTER. I did not meet any in Jacksonville, but saw several at Miami

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have gone through the Ever-glades and I have seen those Indians seemingly engaged in pursuits, selling trinkets and cotton goods, and coming into town to make purchases. Does the gentleman infer when he speaks of those Indians with whom he came in contact, that they were supposed to live far off in the Everglades and out of reach of civilization and did not come into town?

Mr. CARTER. Those I saw were mostly Indians who came into town, and if those remotely removed from civilization are any less capable than those I met in the towns, then, indeed, they need some care from the Federal Government. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, some of them assuredly are self-supporting.

Mr. CARTER. That is true as long as the fish and game remain in the Everglades.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some of them act as guides out of Miami.

Mr. CARTER. And if the Everglades remain, will there be use for guides?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The State of Florida is already draining the Everglades, and there is a constant report concerning the condition of the Indians.

Mr. CARTER. The Indian as an attraction has got to be done away with as civilization progresses, and these Indians will have to be given some attention in order that they may be made a self-supporting, self-reliant people.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I should like to see, but the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] spoke of the Seminoles as wild rabbits, but that statement is somewhat modified by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. They certainly do fraternize with the white man and come out in the open, although there is certainly a mystery concerning those who live far off in the Everglades, and are never supposed to get into a civilized territory-Mr. CARTER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But an improvement has been made in the Seminoles.

Mr. CARTER. The Government owes something to the Seminoles of Florida, both on the grounds of having deprived them of millions of dollars' worth of valuable property and on account of their incapacity, for as soon as their native haunt, the Everglades, are destroyed as hunting and fishing grounds they will become poverty-stricken and degenerate to the level of beggars and mendicants. But if the proper care and supervision are accorded them they may become substantial, selfreliant citizens.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman, who is so conversant with the ramifications of the subject, think the Seminole will take up all the farm land of Florida, which is also an inducement to the white man?

Mr. CARTER. I think they will, if they are given proper attention and proper care along certain lines by the Federal Government, be merged into our citizenship. Without that care and attention they may become extinct in a few years and pass out of existence, as is usually the case when nothing is done for helpless people.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But will this $10,000 be a Would it not constitute a temptation for drop in the bucket? investigation like those which have already been made for acquiring information which the State of Florida has made?

Mr. CARTER. The real purpose of this $10,000 item is invesigation. It has been explained in the House that the President has set aside a certain amount of land for them, and now it is going to take some money to investigate and find out who are Seminoles, and find out when and how they shall be placed on the land.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma

[Mr. Carter] has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter] is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The item of $10,000 provides for the relief of distress among the Seminole Indians. It is not a question of investigation at all. That is the point that I am making.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is a question of reappropriation, I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is made available in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have not the act before me. I have the bill. The bill says, in quotation marks, "For relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, and for purposes of their civilization," so that it is not a question of information and it is not a question of investigation or securing any more data than we already have on this subject. As presented to the House, the proposition is that we shall lay aside this $10,000 for possible relief of distress that may occur among the Seminoles.

Mr. CARTER. I think, Mr. Chariman, we can assume that before we can relieve distress we must first investigate about the relief of that distress and to what extent relief can be

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yet we have a statement here that but little over $100 has been spent for an investigation of a situation concerning which we have very little information before the committee, so that it would seem that the main purpose of the item pending here is to send people down there to look into the Everglades, which has been done time and time again, and to withhold that fund until the department is assured by somebody that the Indians are in distress.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, the wording of the provision might be changed to advantage. What should be done, in my opinion, is that an investigation should be made at the earliest possible moment of the condition of these people and the number of them, the number of acres that would be required for their allotments, and as to what plan should be pursued by the Federal Government for their education and civilization.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They should be treated as other Indians are treated.

Mr. CARTER. Yes. That is the point exactly. they should be treated as other Indians are treated. The time has probably not come yet when any funds might be used for the relief of distress among them, because, as I stated two or three times already, as long as the Everglades are there they will probably not need any relief from distress, but they do need something for civilization. Something is needed, I think, for investigation of the condition.

Mr. MONDELLI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming. Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman suggests that we should care for these Indians, particularly if the Everglades are drained. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that practically all of those lands have gone to the State of Florida, and that they are the property of the State of Florida, and that they have been disposed of, substantially? Why should not the State of Florida take care of these poor, unfortunate people?

Mr. CARTER. It is not, I think, and it has never been the policy of the Federal Government to impose those duties on the States. I am free to admit that in some cases the States might do this better than the Federal Government, but, as the gentleman well knows, since the inception of this Government its avowed policy has been to care for the Indians itself, and care for Indian affairs, especially of those of Indians that are helpless and incompetent.

Mr. MONDELL. But these are Indians that have never been placed on a reservation.

Mr. CARTER. They ought to be allotted. I do not believe in the reservation system.

MONDELL. They have never been on a reservation. They have never been under Government care. They are part of the State of Florida. The State of Florida occupies the They hunt and fish over them. Why should not the State of Florida take care of them?

Mr. CARTER. The same thing might apply to the gentleman's own State or to the State which I have the honor in part to represent.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope, if the time ever comes that the people of my State have received from the Indians all the property they have in the State, we will not forevermore be calling upon the Federal Government to take care of our own unfortunates. I do not think that is good policy.

Mr. CARTER. Is the gentleman so sure-

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, I realize that the gentleman, being from Oklahoma, wants to fortify himself on that proposition, because he may be looking forward to the time—

Mr. CARTER. On what proposition? Mr. MONDELL. On the proposition that the Federal Government must forevermore care for those who are unfortunate and unable to take care of themselves and who may have a strain of Indian blood in them. I say that because the gentle-man from Oklahoma has a great many such people in his State.

Mr. CARTER. Does the gentleman mean that personally? Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no. The gentleman from Oklahoma, to whom I am now addressing my remarks, is always able to take care of himself, and always will be, and I am sure his posterity will be. Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Oklahoma will be supported at the expense of the Government as long as he

[Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. In his present position. I join in that hope. Mr. CARTER. I thank both gentlemen. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. I simply desired to make a statement in connection with what the gentleman was then saying, but I would rather be recognized in my own right now.

Mr. CARTER. I think I have said about all I cared to say. Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, my recollection of the time when this item was first inserted in the bill is rather distinct. I think it was three years ago that representation was made to the committee that the Seminoles of Florida were in a distressing condition, and needed some immediate aid from the Government. I think it is necessary that we should bear in mind that these particular Seminoles are those who refused to migrate or leave their native place when the main body of the Seminoles were removed to what is now Oklahoma. In other words, these Indians are refugees. They are swamp birds. They are unrelated to any other band of Indians. They have no means, they have no property. All the ownership they have of anything is so much of the air as they breathe and so much of the fruit of the trees as they can gather that nature gives them. It was represented at that time that they were in a distressing condition and that they needed $10,000 to aid them.

Now, I do not think it is at all wise to suggest that the State of Florida should be required or expected to take care of these Indians. Everybody knows that the State of Florida will not No State has ever done it. No State expects to do it. These Indians, if they are wards of any sovereignty, are the wards of the Federal Government, and it is the duty of the Federal Government to take care of them, as it has been the duty of the Federal Government to take care of Indians every-

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman comes from a State having considerable Indian population?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I suppose that has nothing to do with the gentleman's position.

Mr. MILLER. They do not draw one cent from the Federal Treasury, but pay their own expenses.

Mr. MONDELL. That is as it should be, and I am surprised that the gentleman does not want the State of Florida to adopt the same methods.

Mr. MILLER. I do; but here are refugees without any property, without a tribe, without a home that they can call their

Mr. MONDELL. Has it come to this-that the great State of Florida, a beneficiary of the Government to the extent of to accomplish that purpose.

12,000,000 acres of swamp land, is so unmindful of the people of its State that it will not support them because the strong arm of the Federal Government does not reach out and protect them? I have no such low estimate of the character of the people of Florida or the State of Florida. I think they can be depended upon to do the right thing.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield to the gentleman from Wyoming to make a speech. He has made his speech repeatedly, and I have always listened to it with pleasure. last time he made it with greater emphasis than before, and I listened to it with greater pleasure on my part. I want that I do not deem it my duty to defend the State of Florida, but I do believe the State of Florida has taken as much care of its people and spent as much of its own money to care for the Seminoles in the Everglades as the State of Wyoming has spent on the Indians of that State.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairmantleman from Texas will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I have not quite closed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I simply want to ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in five minutes. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gen-

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman— Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. Mr. MILLER. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will state his point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor, and there was one motion pending before the House at the time when the gentleman from Texas made the motion to limit debate on this paragraph to five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That was only by unanimous consent that the Chair put it in that way. The Chair did not state it in a formal way, but if the committee desires will do so.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to inquire of the Chair if it is not in effect a motion?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. FOWLER. Then there can not be two motions pending before the House at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. Only by unanimous consent; you can do anything by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Minne-sota did not object to the request made by the gentleman from Texas in his time.

Mr. MILLER. No; but I shall object to my five minutes being consumed by the discussion of this point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. This does not come out of the gentleman's

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire in addition to state that the urgency of the situation existed three years ago, because the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House incorporated this appropriation. I remember a year ago when this item came back as one not having been expended and to be reappropriated it was remarked that the department had done nothing toward relieving the distress among these Indians. That comes back to-day with greater strength than a year ago. and I for one believe that there should be incorporated in the item a requirement that the department should make a detailed statement of the situation respecting the Indians within the current year.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman in charge of this committee a few questions with reference to determining the status of the Indians in Florida. I understood from the speech of the gentleman from Minnesota that these Florida Indians are refugees. Now, I have always understood. Mr. Chairman, that they are descendants of the Indians who were originally found in Florida at the discovery of America, or of that portion thereof, and that when the Seminole Indians were transferred from Florida to the West these Indians or their ancestors were so devoted to their homes that they refused to leave and go to the mountains, where there was nothing but rocks and rills. They desired to stay in the fertile land of flowers amid the Everglades. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman, the distinguished chairman of this committee, if anything has ever been done for the purpose of aiding these Indians in Florida in their civilization and education?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That was the purpose of this appropriation-for the relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, and for the purpose of their civilization. investigation is being made by the department as to how best

Mr. FOWLER. Nothing has ever been done in the way of their education?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; because they have not determined as yet what is the best means to pursue in order to educate and civilize them.

Mr. FOWLER. They have always taken care of themselves? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Up to the present time; but it is believed they can not do it in the future, owing to the fact that the Everglades are being drained and the land parceled out and sold, so that they will have no hunting and fishing grounds.

Mr. FOWLER. No land has been allotted to them in the State of Florida?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is proposed to do that.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that the contention of the committeethis appropriation is intended for that?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is intended to see how best to accomplish the purpose of the bill, which is to relieve the distress among them and to civilize them.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman not think that as much attention ought to be given to these Indians as is given by the Government to any other Indians in the United States?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is exactly what we are endeavoring to do, and that is the object and purpose of the bill.

Mr. FOWLER. But, in fact, are they not more dependent now than many other tribes of Indians because of a lack on the part of the Government in the past in giving them the proper attention and the appropriations necessary for their education and civilization?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think so. I will state to the gentleman that it was only a year ago that their condition became known, for the reason that the Everglades had theretofore furnished them hunting and fishing grounds and it was not necessary to take care of them.

Mr. FOWLER. Is the remainder of the appropriation of $10,000 made two years ago anything like adequate to care for those Indians at the present time?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is, because they have spent less than $500 of that appropriation.

Mr. FOWLER. I know that is true, according to the report; buf does the gentleman think the department did its duty toward the maintenance, education, and civilization of these Indians in Florida?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The presumption is that the department did. The men in the department are officers of the law.

Mr. FOWLER. That is the presumption, but is it not a very violent one?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I can not answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not only in favor of this appropriation, but I would go much further than that and would extend the helping hand of this Government to these unfortunate people in a much larger sum than this bill proposes to carry; and I say, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the gentle-man from Minnesota [Mr. Miller], that I do not regard them in any other sense than that they are upon the same footing and the same basis as the other Indians in this country, and that we owe to them the same duty that we owe to the other Indians of the country

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Government, by Executive order of the President, has set apart about 85,000 acres of land in these everglades for these Indians. They will not occupy it. What would the gentleman do if he were the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of the Land Office? Would he catch those Indians and hold them on their allotments?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, if the incoming President should make me Secretary of the Interior, which I know he will not do, then I shall be in a better condition to answer that question after some experience.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

IDAHO.

Sec. 5. For support and civilization of Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation in Idaho, including pay of employees, $30,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A few moments ago I made inquiries of the chairman of the committee in entire good faith relative to three items which had been submitted in the Book of Estimates

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that we are not on those items at the present time, and I ask that the gentleman be confined to the matter before the committee

The CHAIRMAN. As far as the gentleman has gone, he has referred to matters that have been been disposed of in connection with what he intends to say.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We are now under the head of "Idaho," and the gentleman desires to go back to some items under the head of "Wyoming."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to discuss the Idaho item. Before us is an item for the support of Indians on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation. The committee proposes to expend $30,000 for that purpose. I do not know we are under any treaty obligation to do it, but the committee proposes to do it; probably it is proper they should; but the committee when I asked why they did not include in the bill a provision for $150,000 or any part of it to carry out the obligation of the Government under the treaty with the Navajos, referred me to the hearings. Well, now, I did not want to be too insistent at the time. I had not been able to find anything about it in the hearings and I feared I had overlooked it and I have gone through the hearings again and I can not find a single solitary word in the hearings relative to the item to which I have referred.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; in just a moment. In regard to the item for fulfilling treaties with the Navajos I can not find anything. If there is anything in the hearings in regard to the item I will be glad to read it, but I have not seen it.

Mr. FERRIS. I take it the gentleman is proceeding in good faith, and the facts are these: The original book of justifications, which I hold in my hand, has nothing in relation to these three items. Finally they came up with three supplemental estimates in three separate

Mr. MONDELL. They came in time to get in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. FERRIS. They were new provisions providing for new projects. The committee, which were perhaps in error, in accordance with the judgment of the gentleman, refused to accept them. The first item the gentleman refers to has this:

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is at the top of page 22, as follows: "For the development of a water supply for the Navajo Indians, $100,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, $100,000." This is a new item. It has never been carried in a bill in any shape that I am familiar with.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, I find there was a little discussion of two items, but on the other and more important item there was no discussion whatever. Now, if the gentleman says that the committee had a general policy under which it refused to take into consideration any new matter, why that is an explanation. It may not be satisfactory, but it is an explanation.

Mr. FERRIS. That was the view of the committee-that we should not start in with a lot of new projects.

MONDELL. The chairman could have informed the committee to that effect when I made the inquiry that these items were not considered because it was the thought of the committee that they should not add any new items to the bill. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is exactly what I stated,

Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MONDELL. Without consideration of their merits.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Bannocks in Idaho: For pay of physician, teacher, carpenter, miller, engineer, farmer, and blacksmith (art. 10, treaty of July 3, 1868), $5,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman about this Fort Hall irrigation project. This does not seem to be reimbursable. My understanding is these Fort Hall Indians have a very large and valuable reservation, and it seems to me if they have—I may be misinformed—that that ought to be a reimbursable item. That is on page 11, lines 19 and 20.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman desires to know whether it is reimbursable?

Mr. MONDELL. It clearly is not reimbursable. My inquiry is why it is not reimbursable.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Because it was not supposed. after there had been allotted to the Indians the amount of land that the bill called for, that there would be a sufficient balance to reimburse for this vast amount of money it would take to put on this irrigation plant.

Mr. MONDELL. My recollection is-and if I am wrong I hope the chairman will correct me-there is a large irrigation enterprise there. It was constructed under an act of Congress, and that act of Congress was peculiarly worded, so, as a matter of fact, the Indians, instead of paying anything like what the project cost, only paid a small proportion of what the project cost, and this is a continuation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman pardon me?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. This ought to be reimbursable, all the same, because it is for maintenance and oper-Now, does the gentleman think that we ought to first build irrigation projects for the Indians and not charge them for it and then proceed to maintain them for all time to come without charge? Should not the Indian at least be given to understand that he must exert himself to maintain his enterprise after it has been built? We may not secure from the Indian these sums, but he at least ought to understand that he must take care of his own property.

Mr. MANN. As the chairman of the committee does not seem to have the information at hand, may I give the gentleman the information? In fact, this is a reimbursable item, and under the law now maintenance charges are collected from the 12,000 acres included in the irrigation scheme, but that money has to be placed in the Treasury and can not be paid out without an appropriation; and this is merely an appropriation for maintenance, which is covered by maintenance charges turned into the Treasury.

Mr. MONDELL. Is the gentleman certain that this would be reimbursable, without so stating?

Mr. MANN. I will read the information, which I call to the attention of the chairman of the committee, so that he may

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have the information here.

Mr. MANN. In the statement justifying the appropriation is this statement-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to inquire what the gentleman is reading.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will not interrupt me, I desire to read this first:

Though the 12,000 acres on the ceded strip bear maintenance assessments, the amounts collected have to be turned in to the Public Treasury and are not available for expenditure. It is, therefore, necessary that Congress appropriate for the upkeep and operation of this expensive

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that I asked the question of the Indian Commissioner.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman covered it fully in the hearing. I have no question as to that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is the question I asked:

The CHAIRMAN. That is the same as last year. Does it cost that much every year to keep up a ditch, and is that going to be perpetual, to supply the Indians?

To which Mr. Connor, the agency engineer, answered as follows:

Mr. Connor. It will probably be perpetual until the Indians get to the point of paying for their own maintenance. That is, farming their lands and producing something from them. We are collecting maintenance there from the first water users at the rate of $1 per acre every year, but we have no authority of law to use that money without further appropriation. It only amounts to $800 or $1,000 per year at the present state of development.

The Clerk read as follows:

IOWA.

Sec. 6. For pay of one financial clerk, at $600, and one physician, at $480 per annum, at the Sac and Fox Agency, Iowa; in all, $1,080.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. In the two items last read the current law provides for the employment of certain clerks in addition to the two employees already provided for. I notice that expression is left out of this appropriation,

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That was carried in the lumpsum appropriation, and it was explained that we already had them appropriated for before.

Will they still have authority to employ addi-Mr. MANN. tional clerks?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not.

Mr. MANN. How was it carried in the lump sum?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was carried in the lump sum, but was deducted from it.

Mr. MANN. But this financial clerk at $600 and the physician at $400 were carried in the current appropriation bill, and there was also provided additional employees already provided for by law. Now, is it intended to have no other em-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have the same employees as heretofore, but instead of putting them in the lump-sum appropriation they put them in specifically.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that. The two employees appropriated for here were specifically appropriated for in the last appropriation bill. Are there any other employees there, and what was the reason for leaving out the provision? There might be other employees otherwise provided for. I would like to know if there was any special reason

The Clerk read as follows:

KANSAS.

SEC. 7. For support and education of 750 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., and for pay of superintendent, $127,750; for general repairs and improvements, $11,000; in all, $138,750.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Is the gentleman able without any difficulty to give us the expense per pupil at this Haskell school?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. You desire the per capita? The cost per capita is $185. The number of employees is 67, and the enrollment of the school is 768, while the capacity is 750, showing that it has a few scholars over the capacity.

Mr. MANN. The Haskell school is a special school?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is especially appropriated for. Mr. MANN. Yes, I know; but it is not altogether like the ordinary Indian school?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is an industrial school as I understand it. I have visited the Chiloco school, but not the Haskell school.

Mr. MANN. What do those Indian scholars do there? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understand, they take all of the usual branches which they have at other industrial schools, such as blacksmithing, making shoes and harness, and doing laundry work, buggy making, and everything of that kind.

Mr. MANN. Are there any receipts from this school which are turned into the Treasury?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The value of the products of the school last term was $9,116.

Mr. MANN. It seems to be like an expensive school for that kind of a school.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Our experience is that these industrial schools cost more than ordinary schooling, for the reason that they have more machinery to purchase and more expensive appliances to keep up.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows.

MINNESOTA.

SEC. 9. For support and education of 225 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pipestone, Minn., and for pay of superintendent, $39,175; for general repairs and improvements, $4,000; in all, $43,175.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have a committee amendment to that section which I wish to offer.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, line 11, strike out "$4,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,700"; and in line 12 strike out "$43,175" and insert in lieu thereof "$45,875."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state, in connection with that amendment, that the reason is this: This is a nonreservation school and it has been used as an Indian school for a number of years. This is the reason given by the department in a letter recently received:

House of Representatives, Washington, December 19, 1912.

Hon. Scott Ferris,
House of Representatives.

My DEAR MR. FERRIS: The Indian Office says of the Pipestone Indian

My Dear Mr. Ferris: The Indian Office says of the Pipestone Indian School:

"This school is accessible to a large number of Indian pupils needing school facilities, is well equipped, is doing efficient work, and will be needed in the present plan of Indian education for a number of years."

While it is a nonreservation school, it will be used as an Indian school for a number of years. Hence the reasonableness of requests for necessary improvements. If it were to be abandoned in the near future we might try to get along without improvements.

Two years ago $1.500 were appropriated for an electric-lighting plant. The estimate was too small. To complete the work it is necessary that $1,200 more be appropriated.

This year the committee allowed $2,000 for a boys' avatory annex. The amount is not sufficient; $1,500 in addition are required.

My amendment is:

"Strike out $4,000, in line 11, page 13, and insert $6,700, $1,200 thereof for completion of electric-lighting system and $3,500 thereof for lavatory annex to boys' building; in all, $45,875."

Last year the total appropriation was $46,175. So, with the adoption of the amendment, the total appropriation will be less than that of last year.

I visited the school last fall and went over the premises carefully. With me were citizens of Pipestone who were well informed as to the committee reported the bill, and from my own observations and from information I obtained upon the ground, I am confident that the amounts I have named are necessary to complete the things to be undertaken.

undertaken.

Of course, the school needs a gymnasium, a dairy building, and machinery for the steam laundry. But the gymnasium would cost $6,500, the dairy building at least $4,000, and the machinery for the laundry $1,500.

I shall hope at some future time to have the committee look favorably upon these items, but now I am simply asking for what is absolutely necessary to complete the work which the committee has seen fit to undertake.

I have talked with Mr. BURKE and Mr. STEPHENS concerning the matter, and I would be greatly obliged to you if, in my absence, you will offer this amendment and secure its adoption.

Very truly, yours,

W. S. HAMMOND.

This seems to have been a rearrangement, and a letter justifying it comes through the department to the committee, and at a committee meeting held on last Saturday we agreed to this amendment.

Mr. MANN. As I understood the reading of the amendment by the Clerk, it was to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$4,000." Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No. It was to insert "$6,700" and strike out "$4,000," making an increase of $2,700. Still it is less than the appropriation carried last year.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Chair will put the two amendments together. The question is on agreeing to the two amendments, respectively.

The amendments were agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $165,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to use the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians in manner and for purposes provided for in said act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. This item proposes to take $165,000 of the principal in the Treasury and appropriate it for the support and civilization of these Indians. It is the same as in the current law. May I ask how this principal sum is expended in the support and civilization of the Indians? In other words, is it really being expended for things which are of permanent value to the Indians or is it the use of a part of their principal to pay current living expenses?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman in reply that-

The act of January 4, 1889, referred to in this item, provides, among other things, that, after the principal sum accruing to the credit of the Chippewa Indians thereunder from the sale of Chippewa timberlands should exceed the sum of $3,000,000, the United States shall be reimbursed out of the proceeds accruing therefrom for all amounts advanced for the support and education of the Chippewa Indians, and, inasmuch as the balance of the fund to the credit of these Indians on October 31, 1912 (the United States has been reimbursed for advancements), amounted to about $4,250,000, it would appear that no further appropriation should be made for them.

With this vast sum on hand, and additional funds being placed to the credit of the Indians, they are in position to provide funds for their own support and civilization. There are 11,000 Indians under six superintendencies.

Mr. MANN. I am not complaining at all of the payment of money to these Indians for their support out of their own funds, instead of out of the Treasury, but this is a portion of their principal. Now, how is this money being expended? It is not required to be expended. It is a matter of discretion with the Secretary. How does he expend it? Is the money being expended for just food to eat or for permanent improvements in some way for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The statement from the department on this item proceeds:

Six superintendencies are necessary, as each of the reservations bandled thereunder are either so large or so widely separated from each other as not to be handled successfully by combining the jurisdiceach other as not to be handled successfully by combining the jurisdictions of two or more.

The increase of $20,000 over the amount withdrawn last year is asked for the following reasons:

First. Because it is contemplated to use $15,000 in providing lands for certain homeless Mille Lac Chippewa Indians who are entitled to share in the fund and who have not received allotments of land; and, Second, Because it is desired to increase the facilities for giving the adult Indians practical instruction and aid in the pursuit of agriculture.

Mr. MANN. That is not on this item. I think that is on one of the items that the committee did not insert.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is the justification given to the committee:

With regard to this proposition, it is stated that the Indians now obtain a large part of their employment in the lumber industry, but as the timber becomes scarce more and more dependence in gaining their livelihoods must be placed upon cultivation of the soil. The Indian Office plans to employ practical farmers, who are to live among the Indians and who are to have under their charge equipment which may be loaned to the Indians until such a time as they will farm tracts large enough to justify individual purchases of implements and machinery. machinery.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know how much money these Indians receive each year from the Government as in-terest on their funds which are on deposit?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I gave the total amount of their fund, which is about $4,250,000.

Mr. MANN. That is the total amount on deposit.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How much is paid each year in the way of interest?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not know. Probably the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] can state that. He is more familiar with it, as it is in his section of the

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think these Indians have about $4,000,000 on deposit, and I think the interest is about per cent, but I am not certain.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.
Mr. MILLER. The amount of the funds of the Minnesota Chippewas has not been determined exactly, because the accounting has not yet been had. They have between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000 in the Treasury, against which the Government claims an offset of about $3,500,000 or $3,700,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit me, I think there has gone into the Treasury to the credit of these Indians nearly $9,000,000, but as I recall it $4,250,000 was charged up to them on account of moneys that had been advanced previously, that were reimbursable. I think they actually have in the Treasury something over $4,000,000.

Mr. MILLER. They have also coming into the Treasury the proceeds from the sales of timber that will be available in the next two or three years, which will be likely to amount to about $3,000,000.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota is familiar with the situation. Is this money that has been expended from their principal expended for current living expenses practically, or is it expended in the way that people ordinarily would spend the principal of their funds?

Mr. MILLER. It is expended in a great variety of ways. The provision is for their education and support. They expend it in constructing buildings and in other ways. I do not know that there is any particular limitation on it. They expend it in whatever way they think proper.

I will say in addition that the interest on this general permanent fund—if I may use that expression—has never been distributed among the Indians until this year. The original law provided that a large part of it should be distributed among the Indians for education. That has never been done. It provided that the balance should be distributed in other ways, but the distribution has never taken place until this year, although the aggregate amounts to about $1,750,000. This year, however, after some repeated importunities, the department has consented to make a per capita payment, of $75 per Indian, and they have been making that payment during the last month.

Mr. MANN. And yet, notwithstanding that, it is proposed now to appropriate a portion of the principal in addition to that for current expenses.

Mr. MILLER. That is practically true. I have always been somewhat in doubt about the propriety of this particular appropriation, but it seems that they have used it on the whole to good advantage.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that fact; and yet here is a sum to their credit in the Treasury upon which they are entithe to the interest, which they will now receive. Of course if you keep on appropriating part of the principal each year, that means that the interest will grow less, and hence each year the appropriation of a part of the principal will have to be increased, and in the end the principal will be exhausted.

Mr. MILLER. I will say to the gentleman that the increase each year is greatly in excess of this $165,000, and that the total amount has been increasing in recent years.

Mr. MANN. I do not know that the interest is so very much in excess of the $165,000. Probably it does not exceed $250,000. If the fund amounts to $5,000,000, 5 per cent on it would be $250,000, and that ought to be sufficient. If they have been satisfied with $165,000 heretofore without receiving the interest, and if they now receive the interest on $5,000,000, they ought to be willing, I should think, not to spend a portion of the principal unless it is expended for something which is a permanent benefit to them.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. STEENERSON. As I understand, $165,000 is due them under the act of 1889. The Government is simply carrying out what it promised to pay.

Mr. MILLER. I was about to state that.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is a matter of treaty, and this amount is due them.

Mr. MILLER. The treaty was made and the Government agreed that they should have this amount each year.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from Texas to state that there was included in this item $15,000 for the purchase of homesteads for certain Indians. I think probably that was an accidental statement.

Mr. MILLER. That was stricken out on my own motion. will say, if the gentleman wants further information as to the $15,000 item, the original home of the Chippewa Indians was in the vicinity of Mille Lac, and when the treaty was made it contemplated that they would be removed to the White Earth Reservation, and nearly all of them were removed; but about 250 of them have refused to move. The Government has tried every means at its disposal to induce them to move, but they flatly refuse. They go over sometimes, but come back some way or other, if they have to walk back, and live in the vicinity of Mille Lac. They are trespassers there. They occupy small tracts of land which their ancestors occupied, but they are trespassers, as the land belongs to the whites, to individuals. The whites are discontented and the Indians are not particularly contented, and the problem of the department is what to do with these Indians. I received word a year ago that these Indians were destitute and suffering.

I called upon the department and they sent an agent there, and he reported that they were destitute and rations were issued to them. The agent suggested that a purchase should be made from the Chippewa fund of homes for these Indians there. What to do with the Indians is a big question. The whites do not want them, and they have no land there. I do not believe we will apply the combine the combine of the not believe we will ever solve the problem of these or any other Indians by building little homes where they can have an Indian village. They are all dependent, poverty stricken, wards of the Government, and if we are going to do anything for them permanently we have got to provide allotments and sufficient land upon which they can make a living. Fifteen thousand dol-lars, of course, would do nothing toward that; and I thought, rather than have a small beginning without any real benefit, we had better postpone it until a proper disposition of it could

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised that the gentleman from Minnesota did not follow the example of the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] and secure a large enough appropriation from the Government to buy a homestead for these Indians anywhere in the great State of Minnesota. The gentleman from Oklahoma, for the Fort Sill prisoners, secured authorization for the Government to purchase a home anywhere-land sufficient for a farm-in any place in Oklahoma or any other good State.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman think it right to charge up to Oklahoma these Indians brought there by the United States and held as prisoners? Those Indians belong to New Mexico and Arizona, but ran away and went to war and were captured and held at Fort Sill, not by the authority of the State of Oklahoma, but were prisoners of war.

Mr. MANN. I do not charge up anything to Oklahoma, but credit the ingenuity to my distinguished friend from Oklahoma in persuading Congress to give the men a home and a farm because theoretically the Government had them in jail and because they were Indians. If they had been white men, they would have thrown them out with $15 if they had been really in jail. These people were only theoretically in jail, and yet the Government is authorized to buy them farms. I commend the example to my friend from Minnesota.

Mr. CARTER. If they had been white men, they would not have been in jail.

Mr. MANN. These Fort Sill Indians are not in jail.

Mr. MILLER. As an incident to this general proposition, the authority of Congress was given to the Mille Lac Band of Indians to bring suit against the United States Government about four years ago, growing out of the treaty of 1889, and there was a recovery-the case is now before the Supreme Courtapproximately of a million dollars. The disposition of that may enter into the general settlement of this question.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to advance to the executive committee of the White Earth Band of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the annual celebration of said band to be held June 14, 1913, out of the funds belonging to said band.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have a committee amendment that I desire to offer at this time, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order had better be disposed of. I do not understand that the amendment refers to this particular item.

No; it is an amendment submit-Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. ted by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Steenerson].

Mr. MANN: Mr. Chairman, this item, which has been carried in the bill for some time, is for the sum of $1,000 for what is denominated in the bill as an "annual celebration." There are other terms which are applied in other parts of the country to similar celebrations. What I want to know of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] is whether it is at these celebrations, with the circumstances attendant upon them, that Indians have been persuaded to assign their claims or sell their property, so that there has come up so many charges at least of fraud in connection with the White Earth allotments and allottees!

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I can say to the gentleman that this is not an occasion when anything of that kind has ever occurred or probably ever will occur. It is purely an Indian matter. The Indians have complete charge, with the proper supervision of the department officers. It is simply a celebration that they have had for many years. Members of the big tribe gather from the various sections of the country, where they now live, and this is the one thing that is dear to their hearts, and if you strike out one thing from the bill that would work havoc among them it would be this.

Mr. MANN. I have not any intention of endeavoring to strike it out of the bill, but I would like to know whether the law and the rules and regulations concerning intoxicating liquors in Indian country are at all suspended at this annual celebration.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I was about to add that they are not; that there is the most perfect sobriety and orderliness characterizing all of the days and hours of the days and nights of this celebration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I accept the gentleman's statement on that, although I have heard it insinuated that there was more or less illegitimate traffic in fire water on this occasion, and that there were more or less white people gathered around the celebration seeking to obtain the consent of Indians to sell some of their property. I did not know about that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if they connect the holding of an agricultural fair with this appropriation, so that when the Indians get together they exhibit the products of the farms, and so forth

Mr. MILLER. No; they do not. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I recently visited the Saxton Reservation in Arizona, and found there a very creditable exhibit made by those Indians, and I was in hopes that they were following the same example in Minnesota.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, at the end of line 7, add the following as a new paragraph:
"That the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the completion of the drainage survey of ceded Indian lands made by act of April 30, 1908, is hereby reappropriated and made available for an extension of the drainage survey, together with an estimate of the cost of the project, to cover the Red Lake Diminished Reservation, in Minnesota, with a view to determining what portions thereof may be profitably and economically reclaimed by drainage and make the same suitable for agricultural purposes."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota, in whose district this Red Lake Reservation is situated, to explain the reason for the amendment. It is a committee amendment, agreed to by the committee.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would say that I submitted this item to the committee at the request of the Red Lake Indians. They first held a council last June and adopted resolutions and sent them down to me, but they came too late to have the amendment included in the last year's appropriation bill. They wanted this survey made last summer, but it came too late and it could not be very well included in any other bill, although it was put in the sundry civil appropriation bill in the Senate, but was struck out in conference. again held a council while I was present last November, and one of the things that they requested is this extension of the drainage survey to the diminished reservation; and they have recently held another council and sent a copy of the proceedings to me and to the Indian Office, making the same request. Now, I will explain

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman read the letter from the department?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will do so. The matter was submitted to the department, and I will read the letter to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs from the Secretary of the Interior.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, January 2, 1913.

Hon. John H. Stephens,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,

House of Representatives.

Sir: I understand that the following has been suggested to your committee as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill now pending:

"That the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the completion of the drainage survey of ceded Indian lands made by the act of April 30, 1908, is hereby reappropriated and made available for an extension of the drainage survey, together with an estimate of the cost of the project, to cover the Red Lake Diminished Reservation in Minnesota, with a view to determining what portions thereof may be profitably and economically reclaimed by drainage to make the same suitable for agricultural purposes."

The Indian Office desires me to point out that the suggested amendment would be highly desirable, as it will enable that bureau to cause a preliminary survey to be made with a view to determining the feasibility of reclaiming by drainage a considerable quantity of wet, swampy land within the diminished reservation, which it is believed can be drained, and when so drained will be highly adaptable for agricultural purposes. Making the unexpended balance of the prior appropriation available for use within the diminished reservation will enable this department to cause the necessary preliminary surveys to be made without the necessity of asking an additional appropriation for this particular purpose, which the Indian Office advises me it contemplated doing either at the present or the next session of Congress.

I am advised by the Indian Office that the balance of the appropriation remaining unexpended is $4,546.21.

I have the honor to recommend, therefore, that the matter be given favorable consideration by your committee.

SAMUEL ADAMS,

First Assistant Secretary.

SAMUEL ADAMS, First Assistant Secretary.

Now, if the committee will indulge me, I will explain that the Red Lake Reservation contains about 450,000 acres. There are about 150,000 or 200,000 acres of pine and other timber lands. The western part is very good agricultural land providing it could be drained. There are 1,350 Indians on this reservation, and they are reasonably prosperous and doing very well, but their agricultural operations are quite limited. They are desirous of extending their agricultural work. They have made good progress. These Indians are divided into two factions, called the standpatters and progressives. The standpatters are principally composed of the "cross lakers," who are still, are principally composed of the "cross lakers," who are still, I believe, heathen. They are conservatives; they do not believe in allotments in severalty. They want all their property held in common, and I admire them for their sturdiness of character. The other faction or more advanced Indians, the progressives, so called, are very strongly in favor of allotment. Now, this Indian reservation has perhaps two or three hundred million feet of standing timber, which is valuable and is not being cut only where it has been burned, as there is no authority for cutting it. This reservation is owned in common, and no allotments in severalty have yet been made. A few of them have opened farms and some of them have built very good houses, but of course there being no allotments in severalty the man who makes the finest farm and best house is liable to have his house taken away or his land divided up with somebody when the allotments are finally made. For that reason the great question there is the allotment question. There is not sufficient amount of land actually suitable for agriculture available for allotment unless we drain the land. This western part of this reservation is bounded by what we call the 11 towns, which were ceded by this same band in 1904 under an act of Congress which I introduced and which Congress passed. That embraced about a quarter of a million acres of similar land. It was to be sold at $4 an acre, or so much more as it would bring in the market. It was necessary, in order to comply with the treaty with the Indians, to raise a million dollars to pay them for this land—that is, for the 11 towns.

The land was so low and wet that it could not be sold under those conditions, and Congress refused to appropriate the million dollars, so we had the dilemma of how to dispose of it, and on my initiative an item was included in the Indian appropriation bill for a drainage survey, first of $10,000 and then of $10,000 and then of $5,000, to ascertain what could be done with this quarter of a million acres adjoining this unceded land, and the Geological Survey sent out men who made a fine survey, and it was done on scientific principles. We then passed a law allowing that Government land to be assessed for the drainage improvements under the State law the same as if it was owned by private persons. The result was that the land was sold at good prices, but instead of realizing the million dollars that the Indians had agreed to take for it we realized $1,260,000, and we have got land enough to raise $12,000 more, and that land is now the best land in northern Minnesota. This has excited the Indians who own the adjoining land so that they want their land drained also, and hence they have held these three conventions, demanding that their lands be drained in order that they may have agricultural lands to be allotted to them.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This $1,260,000 which was received for 268,000 acres, did that money go to the Indians-all

Mr. STEENERSON. It is in the United States Treasury. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. To the credit of the Indians? Mr. STEENERSON. To the credit of these Indians.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Was the $35,000 appropriated for the drainage survey reimbursed or not?

Mr. STEENERSON. I forgot to state that. The money appropriated for the drainage survey, it was provided by the act, should be raised by raising the price of the unsold ceded Indian lands 3 cents an acre.

There was a million and a half of ceded land which, if it was raised 3 cents an acre, would amount to $45,000. When all that land is sold the United States will be reimbursed by an income of $45,000. Now, they have only expended $30,000, and there is a little over $4,500 left for no specific purpose. There is no provision for it. Now, as you will see, this white here [indicating on map] is the Indian land. That has not been ceded. That is still owned in common. This on the west here [indicating] is where there has been drainage operations and where more than 1,000,000 acres have been reclaimed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Steenerson] has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. This land was sold all around here. Now, it was proposed to take the unexpended balance and extend the survey, which only provided for the ceded lands-this colored part of the map-to the unceded part-this white partand that is simply a preliminary step in order to determine whether this land is as suitable for successful drainage as the land immediately west, or whether this river channel can be sufficiently deepened, and so on; and if it is then determined it is a feasible project and is good for the Indians, it is proposed to follow it up pursuant to this resolution of the Indians. The timber land will be sold for the common benefit of all these 1.300 Indians

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the unexpended balance which it is proposed to use accomplish all you state you desire? Mr. STEENERSON. Very nearly. They stated that there was $4,500 unexpended.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman point out the part of the Indian land that has had this survey made?

Mr. STEENERSON. All this in green and colored is the former Red Lake Indian Reservation, and is ceded land, and the piece in white is unceded.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is that unallotted and held in

Mr. STEENERSON. It is unalletted and is held by these 1,350 Indians. I want to take the money that was raised by increasing the price of these unsold lands and survey the Indian lands, because that land belongs to the Indians, if it belongs to anybody, and it will give us the first step toward what we desire. The Government in selling the land simply acted as trustee for the Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understood the gentleman to say that it was reimbursable under the original act, and the Indians desire it to be done.

Mr. STEENERSON. They are unanimous on that point. had a council with them before I came, and even the standpatters, who were not in favor of the allotment in severalty, wanted it settled so as to know whether it could be put in shape or not.

Mr. MANN. Was all of this in possession of the original

1,300 Indians?

Mr. STEENERSON. No. Before 1859 it did not belong to any specific tribe that anybody knew of, and hence under the Nelson Act, the act of 1889, it was thrown into a common pot, so to speak, and the land throughout all this country was sold for the benefit of the whole Chippewa Nation of Minnesota.

Mr. MANN. And not for the Red Lake Indians? Mr. STEENERSON. No.

Then, what interest have the Red Lake Indians Mr. MANN. in this fund?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will explain that. After the act of 1889 passed, the divided Red Lake River Reservation extended down to the Thief River Falls, and these 260,000 acres were, by the treaty of 1904 ceded to the United States under an agreement made by an Indian inspector, Maj. McLaughlin, whereby the Indians ceded the land to the United States in consideration of $1,000,000, in consideration of the fact that thereafter the Red Lake Reservation should belong to the Red Lake Reservation as a separate treaty. And in that treaty the remnant that was occupied by these Indians should be a separate property.

Mr. MANN. I think not. When this original survey was authorized and an appropriation was made that money was to be raised by adding 3 cents an acre to the land that was yet unsold, as I remember. Mr. STEENERSON, Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, was that land that was yet unsold all the property of these Red Lake Indians?

Mr. STEENERSON. No.

Mr. MANN. That land was sold, and the amount that was accumulated therefrom was used largely for making a survey for the drainage of the land that was sold and the land that was allotted?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

There was some land unallotted, was there not? Mr. MANN.

Mr. STEENERSON. Unallotted?

Mr. MANN. Yes; unallotted. There is some land there now unallotted, is there not?

Mr. STEENERSON. No. I do not think I understan gentleman's question. Where does the gentleman mean? Mr. MANN. Where these Red Lake Indians are, No. I do not think I understand the

Mr. STEENERSON. That is all unallotted.

Mr. MANN. Some of this original land is unallotted?

Mr. STEENERSON. The whole reservation is held unallotted.

Mr. MANN. The present reservation is held unallotted?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. All the land that was surveyed and on which 3 cents an acre was contributed is not unallotted?

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman certainly does not mean to say that you can allot land that was ceded and disposed of? Mr. MANN. No. I have not yet been able to trace any connection between these Red Lake Indians and this fund that is in the Treasury except their desire to expend the fund.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, no; they have not asked especially The fact is that they have always contended that for this fund.

the old Red Lake Reservation belonged to them.

Mr. MANN. But the Government did not agree to that. We did not agree to that. Now they have a reservation of their own which they wish to have surveyed for drainage. do not they pay for it?

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman means, Why do they not do it out of their own money?

Mr. MANN. The money does not belong to them.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, yes; it does. Mr. MANN. In what way? I have not been able to find any connection between this fund and these Indians.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will explain the connection. Thirty thousand dollars already has been expended to facilitate the sale of these other lands, and they have been sold, and the Chippewas of the State of Minnesota got their money sooner than they otherwise would have gotten it; that is, $30,000. Eventually there will be $45,000, and there will be $10,000 that could be used for some other branch of the Chippewa Indians.

Mr. MANN. But the Red Lake Indians do not own it.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is their share of it from other lands. Mr. MANN. Their lands have been sold, and the fact that they claim it does not make it theirs.

Mr. STEENERSON. There are no other Indians who claim it. Mr. MANN. I see no reason, because a fund has been created by the sale of certain Indian lands, and is in the Treasury, why that fund should be expended for the benefit of other Indians, simply because they want it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, if the fund was derived in part from a sale of their property, they are entitled to a share in the property.

Mr. MANN. How much property did these Red Lake Indians have-lands which have been sold and which contributed 3 cents an acre to this fund?

Mr. STEENERSON. They claimed to have the whole of that land.

Mr. MANN. They do not claim it now, because that was a claim that was not admitted by the Government and has not been carried out by the treaty.

Mr. STEENERSON. Even the Government said that the Red Lake Indians had contributed more than their share to the common fund when they had contributed these 3,000,000 acres under the act of 1889. The report of the Secretary of the Interior so stated, and President Harrison so stated in his message to Congress

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman ever introduce a bill on this subject?

Mr. STEENERSON. We have a bill now in course of preparation, but this would give an examination sooner than that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that a matter of this sort, which, of course, is perfectly intelligible to the gentleman in charge, can not very well be understood by other Members on the floor without some opportunity to examine it. It seems to me that the gentleman ought to have had a bill introduced and reported to the House by the committee if such a condition existed, so that Members might have an opportunity to examine it. Then there might be no objection to including it. But to offer an amendment on the floor of the House in a mat-ter of this sort, which in itself does not amount to very much, but which goes far as a matter of principle when you take into consideration that we may be entering upon the drainage of all the Indian and other swamp lands in the United States, I do not think even the committee ought to ask to have it inserted in the bill under those circumstances at this time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that part of this money has already been expended on these same lands for the purpose of drainage, making a survey, and seeing whether or not a portion of the reservation could be drained. We are only asking for the use of the unexpended balance in extending the same drainage system for the same Indians. If we made a mistake in the first instance, we are making a mistake now.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. I hope the gentleman will not deem it necessary to make a point of order against this. It seems to me it is probably a more just case of its kind than is likely ever to arise again. When these lands were ceded, in 1904, as pointed out by my colleague, Mr. Steenerson, the Government was unable to sell the lands, and it then sought to recoup itself for the amount it agreed to pay the Indians. Thereupon it devised the scheme of having a drainage survey, which called for an appropriation of $35,000.

Mr. MANN. That amount has been received up to date, has it not?

Mr. MILLER. The amount of $35,000 has been appropriated. and about $30,000 has been used. In order to recoup itself for this appropriation of $35,000 the Government distributed a tax of 3 cents per acre over these lands.

Mr. MANN. Over what lands?

Mr. MILLER. Over these ceded lands where the survey was

Mr. MANN. Did that apply to anything except lands which were sold?

Mr. MILLER. It did not. It was not necessary that it should.

Mr. STEENERSON. It applied to the unsold lands also.

Mr. MILLER. It applied to the unsold lands that were to be sold.

Mr. MANN. I mean lands that were sold and that were to be sold.

Mr. MILLER. It applied to those lands that were to be sold and which were sold, and that gave the Government $45,000.

They sold the land for that much more. Indians did not have to pay it.

Mr. MILLER. They sold the land for that much more than the Government agreed to pay the Indians.

Mr. MANN. So that it was not paid by the Indians? Mr. MILLER. The land was sold by the United States, and it belonged to the United States, because it had been ceded by the Indians to the United States. The Government of the United States has expended in that survey $30,000 and has received back $45,000 and has actually gained $15,000. Now, that profit-if we can speak of it as such-was derived from the property of this particular band of Indians.

Mr. MANN. This particular band of Indians did not own the property, by the way.

Mr. MILLER. The Chippewas of Minnesota owned it.

Mr. MANN. But, assuming for the sake of the argument that they did own it, the Government made a treaty with them in which it agreed to pay them so much for the land.
Mr. MILLER. Precisely.

Mr. MANN. Thereupon the Government sold the land for a little more.

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is the Government under any obligation to turn over the excess to the Indians?

Mr. MILLER. I think not. I do not maintain that it is. Mr. MANN. That is what this amounts to.

Mr. MILLER. Not necessarily. The Government came out winner in the transaction, as it always has in transactions of this sort.

Mr. MANN. No; the Government usually comes out loser; and it took the chance of losing in this transaction, and it has not yet come out a winner, because it has not sold all the land.

Mr. MILLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. In Minnesota the Government has come out a very big winner in every transaction with the Indians.

Mr. MANN. On the contrary, in Minnesota in many cases the Government has come out a loser, and may come out a loser on these lands, which have not yet been finally disposed of.

Mr. MILLER. What I am trying to show to the gentleman is—and I know that at first glance it requires a moment's reflection—that it would be only just to give these Indians an opportunity to have their lands surveyed when the cost is so

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the lands which they are proposing to survey are valuable lands. Why should not they contribute toward paying for the surveys on their land? They have not contributed anything yet. Other lands where the Government agreed to pay the Indians for it-it may be in some cases more than they were worth-have paid 3 cents an acre. These Indians have not paid anything and the lands have not paid anything. Why should not they pay in the case of the surveys of their own land for drainage purposes?

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I am unwilling that any wrong impression should go out as to a matter of fact. My last advice was to the effect that the whole $45,000 had not all been paid into the Treasury. I think that the unsold lands when they are sold will realize $45,000, but that has not been done as yet.

Mr. MILLER. How much has been reimbursed?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not know; they say it was pretty fast last year, and I think it comes to quite a high figure.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not know whether the Government will ever sell the land for the amount it agreed to pay the Indians. It has not been able to sell it yet for that

Mr. STEENERSON. I want to say further that in view of the very fine distinction made by the gentleman between the Red Lake Chippewas and the Chippewas of Minnesota, many of whom I have the honor to represent, to avoid any technicality whatever I am willing to have the appropriation amended so as to make it reimbursable out of the Red Lake fund.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman from Texas would ask to let this go over until Monday, so that we will have a chance to see what the proposition is, and then we can prepare the necessary amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman asks that it be passed on the theory that there might not be anything to reimburse from, I want to say that they have $552,550 cash on hand belonging to this particular band, so that there would be no doubt about the reimbursability of it.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt about that; the land is good for reimbursement.

Mr. STEENERSON. They have the money, and they want it used.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to proceed for a half an hour longer.

Mr. MANN. I understood that the gentleman at 5 o'clock was going to move that the committee rise.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I thought that we might finish up these provisions with relation to Montana.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to running a little while longer. Do I understand that this item is passed by unanimous consent with the point of order pending?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this item be passed with the point of order pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Texas will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Flathead Reservation, in Montana, and the unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of under authority of law, including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $150,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, line 25, strike out the figures $150,000 and insert $250,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, to that I make a point of order.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to occupy the time of the committee at this late hour in the afternoon to any great extent. But I sincerely hope that this amendment may be adopted, because I believe it is a meritorious and necessary amendment; that the appropriation not only ought to be increased to $250,000 but to $450,000, in accordance with the estimates and recommendations of the supervising engineer of the Flathead irrigation project and in accordance with the suggestions of the Director of the Reclamation Service.

It is intended when this project is completed to irrigate about 150,000 acres of land on this reservation. It will cost $3,781,000 to complete the project. At the rate the appropriations are now being made, it will be in all probability many years before the project is finished. Many of the people who are now residing upon this reservation, waiting patiently for water to be turned into the ditches, which they claim the Government had promised, will be dead and gone when the project is completed.

I have received a number of protests from people residing in that section of the State against these unusual and, as they allege, unnecessary delays. Therefore I consider it my duty to bring this matter to the attention of the committee, and ask them, if they will, to appropriate the sum of money recommended by the Director of the Reclamation Service, who is in charge of this construction work, so that the people who are now living upon the reservation may derive some benefit from this project before they are summoned to another world.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the people insisting on that are mainly white persons?

Mr. PRAY. There are some 1,500 settlers who are now occupying the surplus lands, and they have a perfect right, in my judgment, to insist upon the completion of the project.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRAY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. How much are these combined irrigation systems to cost? There is only one system, I will say to the gentleman, on the Flathead project. It is composed of five units.

Mr. MANN. I am taking the language of the law, which calls it "systems.

Mr. PRAY. I accept the gentleman's correction. The amount is estimated at $3,781,000.

Mr. MANN. How much money has been expended upon it up

Mr. PRAY. I think about $500,000. Mr. MANN. Is that utilizable at all?

Mr. PRAY. In what respect? Mr. MANN. Is there anything there that can be used in the way of irrigation now?

Mr. PRAY. Oh, yes; to some extent. Some of the units are partially completed. One unit, I believe, is 85 per cent com-

Mr. MANN. Is there any land being irrigated there at the present time?

Mr. PRAY. Some land; yes.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the director asked for $250,000.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I believe, Mr. PRAY. asked for $250,000, but the director and supervising engineer estimated for $450,000. Right in that connection I will say to the gentleman that a year ago $200,000 was appropriated, but the expenditure of that appropriation was limited to two projects, and it was considered practically inadvisable to expend it on those two projects. In fact, it could not be done economically; at any rate, it was so stated by the engineer on the project, when I visited there last fall.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

Mr. PRAY. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I presume the project to which the gentleman refers is the Jocko division, 84 per cent of which has been completed, and the other project is the Pablo division, of which 42 per cent has been completed. Are not these two items the units which the committee desires to finish before going ahead with any other?

Mr. PRAY.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not that the reason that the committee refused the larger appropriations?

Mr. PRAY. That is exactly what I am trying to bring to the attention of the chairman of the committee. A year ago in the Indian appropriation bill you appropriated $200,000 for this project, but so limited the use of that appropriation as to make it practically useless.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. PRAY.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is familiar with the conditions upon that reservation. Is it not true that the making of these small appropriations increases the cost of the construction because of the fact that only small units can be constructed at one time and it is impossible to let the contracts in the most economical manner?

That is quite true.

Mr. MONDELL. And that the delay in making large appropriations now keeps the Government and the Indians out of the use of the lands for the reclamation of which large sums have already been appropriated?

Mr. PRAY. Yes; it does. Mr. MONDELL. So that in the interest of economy and in the interest of the early utilization of the land now partly irrigated and for the irrigation of which large sums have been expended we need a very much larger amount than this?

Mr. PRAY. The Director of the Reclamation Service and other officials have stated repeatedly that it necessarily increases the cost of the project where inadequate sums are appropriated from time to time. Let me go into the subject a little more fully.

Three great irrigation projects are now and have been for some time under construction on Indian reservations in Montana. These projects are being built by the United States Reclamation Service for the Indian Office. If they should ever be completed, they would irrigate thousands of acres of fertile lands on the Flathead, Blackfeet, and Fort Peck Indian Reservations. With the meager appropriations that are now being made by Congress for this important work it will be many years before the projects will be finished. People who are now occupying these lands, relying upon the implied promise of their Government to furnish the water, will be old and decrepit or else in their graves before that promise is fulfilled, unless a different course is pursued in making appropriations. Take the Flathead project, which we have been considering, for example, that being the largest and most expensive one undertaken.

The reclamation officials asked the Committee on Indian Affairs to appropriate $450,000 for the coming season, and have received, as this bill will show, $150,000 instead. The other appropriations are cut proportionately. If the present policy is continued, it will probably be about 30 years before the Flathead project is finally completed. In the meanwhile there are 1,500 homesteaders on this reservation marking time, unable to cultivate their lands profitably because of lack of water for irrigation during the season when water is most needed. The Indian appropriation bill at the last session carried an item of $200,000 for this project, but the engineers found when they called for money to proceed with the work that they could expend economically only about $90,000 of the amount thus appropriated, because of the conditions imposed requiring the entire sum to be used in work on but two units of the project. For the purposes of administration and economical management, Reclamation Service has divided the project into several units, and the work of construction is carried on according to plans adopted by the engineers far in advance of construction. One of the units upon which the appropriation was required to be spent was nearly completed, and it was not found to be practicable, in the judgment of the officials in charge, to do more than a small amount of work on the other unit at that particular time. So, as a matter of fact, the greater part of the season was wasted and they were unable to use $110,000 of the appropriation. If an abandonment of the remaining units of these projects is contemplated by our friends who now control the House, a most excellent beginning has been made.

It is my understanding that the committee has been thoroughly acquainted with the needs of the different projects by the Government officials in charge of the work; that they have presented to the committee from time to time complete information relating to the plans of construction and appropriations required, but that the response has been unfavorable to an expeditious and economical completion of the projects. What sort of business judgment and foresight is it to turn down the estimates of the department calling for an appropriation of $450,000 and allow $150,000 for a year's work on a project which, when finished will cost $3,781,000, when all of these appropriations can be economically used and are reimbursable? The answer to this query would probably be that it is not good business to appropriate large sums of money out of the Treasury without knowing when and in what manner it is going to be returned. The fact is that we have now expended, or had at the close of the fiscal year June 30, 1912, $490,000 on the Flathead project and that $390,000 of that amount has already been reimbursed to the United States and paid into the Treasury. The reports show that the timber alone on this reservation is worth several hundred thousand dollars more than the entire cost of the project, and that is not taking into account at all the increased value of the land from $75 to $150 per acre. If we are going to irrigate 200,000 acres of land which, when water is furnished, will be worth $20,000,000, it seems to me that the Government is not entering upon a speculative or hazardous enterprise in any sense, but is proceeding along conservative lines in the furtherance of a policy enacted by Congress and favored by two different administra-

These great projects have been under way for three years. The opening of these reservations was given wide publicity, likewise the fact that the Government proposed to reclaim large areas by construction of irrigation works. Thousands of settlers took up land and established their homes upon these reservations, believing in the responsibility and good faith of the Government and that it would really accomplish what it apparently was making every preparation to undertake when they went upon these lands.

These projects present no specially difficult engineering roblems. The plans have all been perfected by the reclamation officials, and the men and equipment are on the ground and all is in readiness to proceed with all possible expedition. the money has been withheld or else offered in small driblets, and every season of delay caused by inadequate appropriations will undoubtedly greatly increase the present estimate of cost on all these projects.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Newell, engineer in charge of this work, states:

There appeared to be, at the time of the last hearing, 2,265 Flathead Indians. The land to be irrigated comprises 150,000 acres, at an estimated cost of $3,781,000, the cost per acre being $30. There was expended to July 1, 1911, $490,019.44. We appropriated for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912, $400,000, and in the last appropriation bill, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, we appropriated $200,000. Now, they are asking for the next fiscal year an appropriation of $200,050.

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to finish reading this, as it gives a succinct statement of the whole matter.

Mr. PRAY. I think the gentleman made a mistake in the

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas (reading):

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas (reading):

The former hearings disclosed the fact that these Indians have lands and timber conservatively estimated to be worth about $5,000,000; and $370,000 of the moneys expended on this project had been actually reimbursed in the Treasury at the time of the hearings a year ago. There appears to be five units in connection with this project, and when the hearings were held last year the Jocko unit, I think, was said to be $1.5 per cent completed, the Mission unit was 9.6 per cent completed; the Pablo unit was 28.7 per cent completed; the Polson unit was 9.8 per cent completed; and the Post unit was 31 per cent completed.

Now, the present condition of the work, as shown by the last copy of the Reclamation Record for November, 1912, is as follows: The Jocko division is 84 per cent completed; the Mission division is 11.6 per cent completed; the Pablo division is 42.5 per cent completed; the Polson division is 9.9 per cent completed; and the Post division is 35.8 per cent completed.

We desired that the Jocko unit should be completed, so that water could be furnished to parties underneath those ditches, and also the Pablo division 42 per cent, nearly half of that was completed. That is the reason we cut the appropriation to what it is.

Mr. PRAY. Is not the recommendation $250,000 instead of $200,050?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. PRAY. And is it not further the fact that the officials stated that last year's appropriation of money could not be economically expended because of the limitations imposed upon its use?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Oh, certainly; they wanted the full amount they asked for, but we did not think it proper to give it to them before they completed these two units now so nearly completed. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman made a point of order.

Does the gentleman desire a ruling on that?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I withdraw the point of order and ask for a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to withdraw from the Treasury the entire share of the Northern Cheyenne Indians in the permanent fund created under section 17 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889 (U. S. Stat. L., vol., 25, p. 888), and to expend it for the benefit of said Northern Cheyenne Indians in the purchase of stock cattle or such articles as in his judgment will best advance said Indians in civilization and self-support, $48,075.07.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

After the figures in line 16, page 16, insert as a new paragraph the

After the figures in line 16, page 16, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"The sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $25,000 of which shall become immediately available, is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of surveying the land within the Tongue River or Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation, Mont., for completing the survey of the lands within the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont., and for making a meander survey around the Flathead Lake so as to identify the lands embraced within the power-site withdrawal of 100 linear feet around that lake back from the high-water mark for the year 1909."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman. think it is clearly subject to a point of order, as it is new

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Pending that I want to inquire in regard to the paragraph from lines 7 to 16. The amendment of the gentleman from Montana is a new paragraph. I want to make inquiry in regard to the paragraph beginning at line 7 and ending in line 16. I call the attention of the chairman to the fact that at the end of line 16 is the sum of $48,075.07.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand this amendment to be offered as a new paragraph and has no connection with this. It does not propose to touch the total.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. His amendment has no reference to this paragraph at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I call the attention of the Chairman again to line 16. At the end of the line are the figures $48,075.07. Do I understand that is the amount appropriated by this item?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the amount authorized by the department.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is the amount of the Northern Cheyenne Indians in the permanent fund?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is right, and they have asked this amount be given for the purpose stated in the amendment

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I call the Chairman's attention again to the fact that the language is very ambiguous, and it is doubtful whether it appropriates it. It seems to me it has no connection with it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is in accordance with the letter they have forwarded.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That does not help it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What amendment does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am not certain it requires

But here is an authorization:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to withdraw from the Treasury the entire share of the Northern Cheyenne Indians in the permanent fund—

And so forth.

And to expend it for the benefit of the said Northern Cheyenne Indians in the purchase of stock cattle or such articles as in his judgment will best advance said Indians in civilization and self-support, $48,075.07.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This follows the law already. That is the unexpended balance.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How do we know it is the unexpended balance?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is what they state in the letter.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then, in line 13, after the comma, should it not state "which amount is $48,075.07, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to expend it

I am simply calling the attention of the committee to the way in the paragraph the $48,000 is appropriated.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the first part of the sentence makes that clear, namely:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to withdraw from the Treasury the entire share—

In a certain event.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Suppose the entire share happened to be $58,000?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. These are their figures, and they keep books there.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this item does not state that this is the balance. It stands as $48,000 and odd in figures.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the appropriation. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It does not so state. It does not appropriate $48,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What amendment would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think the $48,000, as it stands at present-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman noticed the first language in line 7, namely:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to withdraw from the Treasury—

And so forth?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. He has draw it if it is $48,000 or if it is $148,000? He has authority to with-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It says that it is for the benefit of the Shawnee Indians.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What have the figures $48,000 there to do?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to their going Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think they ought to be there in that form. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If you will make a motion-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am not going to make a motion, but I think it is inadvertently inserted in that way, and I think it ought to go out, or to make it so that it is understood that we can not expend more than $48,075.07. Suppose the share of the Cheyenne Indians is $148,000, would that limit the Secretary of the Treasury from drawing from the Treasury

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think that is merely directory.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think so. It directs him to take out whatever balance there is there.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield just a moment? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. I am rather inclined to think the gentleman's suggestion is a good one. If you will turn over to page 19, lines to 24, you will find there the following language used to withdraw trust funds:

Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States at his discretion the sum of $25,000.

This language has always answered the purpose, all right The specific amount withdrawn is stated in the body of the paragraph—and I wonder if it might not help the language by inserting, after the word "Treasury," page 16, line 8, the words "the sum of $48,075.07, which is the share of the Northern Cheyenne Indians"?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman will see that if you made a period where the comma apears, after the word "support," in line 16, that the sentence would be complete, and the $48,075.07 would not mean anything

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman sure that it would not be contended as meaning something? I think the suggestion made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] as to the form is quite apt, but this being a trust fund I do not suppose that we make an appropriation.

Mr. FERRIS. Simply withdraw it.

Mr. MANN. We simply withdraw it, and where the act says, "the entire share of the Northern Cheyenne Indians, which was $48,075.07," I apprehend the department would not allow them to withdraw more than the $48,075.07. I at first thought that this being an item that does draw interest, there might be no way of ascertaining the exact amount that was in the Treasury at the date at which it was to be withdrawn, but, as I understand now, the interest is payable without the action of Congress at all, and the department has certified that there remains this amount, $48,075.07.

Without taking time to strike out that 7 cents, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] that it is now 7 minutes of half past 5.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to have this item settled

This item is settled.

Mr. FERRIS. There is a point of order pending. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; a point of order is pending.

Mr. FERRIS. But to another section.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no point of order pending to The point of order that was made does not relate this section. to this section.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment. On line 13, page 16, after the parenthesis, insert the words "which amount is $48,075.07." And then strike out the figures in line 16, after the words "selfsupport.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 16, line 13, by inserting, after the parenthesis, "$48,075.07" and striking out, on line 16, after the words "self-support," the figures "$48,075.07."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling on the point of order suggested by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Pray]

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Chairman, would it not be possible for the committee to rise now and leave this matter pending?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to have a ruling ow. I think it is perfectly clear, Mr. Chairman, that it is new legislation. It provides for a survey, and it is certainly new legislation.

Mr. PRAY. Would not the gentleman agree to rise now? I desire to discuss the amendment briefly later.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman to make such observations as he pleases now. It is six minutes until half-past 5.

Mr. PRAY. I hope the gentleman from Texas will consent to allow it to go over.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will reserve temporarily the point of order. The gentleman can conclude on Monday. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 26874) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL. Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 10169. To provide for holding the district court of the United States for Porto Rico during the absence from the island of the United States district judge and for the trial of cases in the event of the disqualification of or inability to act by the said judge; and

H. R. 10648. Amending an act entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with the Indian tribes and to protect the same."

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, January 6, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Duwamish River, Wash. (H. Doc. No. 1219); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of West Fork, South Branch Chicago River, Ill., from Robey Street west to Forty-eighth Avenue (H. Doc. No. 1220); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on examination and survey of Mississippi River between Winnibigoshish and Pokegama reservoirs; and from Leech Lake Dam to the mouth of Leech River, Minn., with a view to straightening and improving the channel (H. Doc. No. 1223); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting an urgent deficiency estimate of appropriation for improvement of electric-light plant, Department of the Interior (H. Doc. No. 1221); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, an authentic copy of the certificate of final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice President appointed in the State of Utah at the election held therein on November 5, 1912: to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

6. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, an authentic copy of the certificate of final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice President appointed in the State of Texas at the election held therein on November 5, 1912; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

7. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, an authentic copy of the certificate of final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice President appointed in the State of Michigan at an election held therein November 5, 1912; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

8. A letter from the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, transmitting an inventory of all property in his charge belonging to the United States (H. Doc. No. 1222); to the Committee on Accounts and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GRAHAM, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, submitted a report (No. 1279), together with the views of the minority, on the matter of the investiga-tion of the Indian Bureau, with transcript of testimony taken and exhibits offered from April 9, 1912, to August 17, 1912, which said report was referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky (by request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia): A bill (H. R. 27657) to authorize the opening of a minor street from Georgia Avenue to Ninth Street NW., through squares 2875 and 2877, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also (by request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia), a bill (H. R. 27658) to authorize the widening and opening of Rhode Island Avenue from Fourth Street east to the District line: to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 27659) amending section 2 of an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the de-ceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 27660) granting to the city of Klamath Falls, Oreg., certain unsurveyed lands for park purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BATHRICK: A bill (H. R. 27661) to establish a bureau to institute a system of loaning money to farmers upon agricultural lands; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. REILLY: A bill (H. R. 27662) making it unlawful for any society, order, or association to send or receive through the United States mails, or to deposit in the United States mails, any written or printed matter representing such society, fraternal order, or association to be named or designated or entitled by any name hereafter adopted, any word or part of which title shall be the name of any bird or animal, the name of which bird or animal is already being used as a part of its title or name by any other society, fraternal order, or associa-tion; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 27663) to amend section 2291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to homesteads; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. LOBECK: A bill (H. R, 27664) to incorporate the Virginia Terminal Co.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 27665) to authorize the extension and enlargement of the post-office building in the city of Lincoln, Nebr.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. TAGGART: A bill (H. R. 27.66) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 25, 1912; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 27667) granting a pension to Wilburn Munkers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. By Mr. AMES: A bill (H. R. 27668) granting a pension to Charles E. Brackett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 27669) granting a pension to Gertrude Meloy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 27670) granting a pension to Katherine M. Keegan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BARCHFELD: A bill (H. R. 27671) granting an increase of pension to George W. Haney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 27672) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Lowe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 27673) granting an increase of pension to
